

Workshop scheduled to discuss Daniel Boone Forest management

The public will influence the future management of a large portion of the Daniel Boone Forest at a workshop May 20 at Morehead State University. The U.S. Forest Service invited about 100 participants to attend the one-day session about the 115,000-acre Licking River Unit.

Local elected and business officials, representatives of interested state and federal agencies, plus industry, special interest groups, and the general public are scheduled to attend the workshop which will begin at 9:30 a.m. in the Cassidy Building.

The Licking River Unit contains all of the forest's Morehead Ranger District and includes Cave Run Lake and the Pioneer Weapons Hunting Area. It is one of 10 planning units in the 648,000-acre national forest. The participants will be grouped into teams to draw up various ways of managing this public land.

The groups will report to the forest supervisor their alternatives and priorities. The forest will write the final unit plan which will direct recreation, timber, wildlife, and watershed programs, and will also deal with sensitive areas such as off road vehicle use and minerals.

Persons interested in participating are asked to pre-register by writing or calling the Daniel Boone National Forest, 100 Vaught Road, Winchester, Ky. Local residents can also register at the District Ranger's Office in Morehead.

The forest will accept written comments concerning the Licking River Unit until June 15.

Suspended students still attend school

A new plan to deal with suspended students is underway in Fairfax County, Va. The plan permits suspended students to spend their time in school classrooms. The plan was adopted by the district after a decision was made that throwing students out of school for a short time does not improve either the students' behavior or education. School officials now designate special areas of the school for suspended students, who are supervised by guidance or administrative personnel. When in these special areas suspended students may not mix with regular students, but can work in classroom assignments. They receive special help from teachers or tutors. All teachers involved agree that the program has improved school discipline.

WHICH HOUSE HAS THE HIGHEST COOLING BILL?

Most people would readily guess the larger house costs more to air condition. It might not. The size of a house is only one factor that determines its cooling bill.

Lemons for fruit and fun

By Nerys Shackelford
 UK State of Agriculture

For some exotic winter greenery that will brighten the home, serve as a conversation piece, and provide some delicious juicy fruit as well, try growing a dwarf lemon.

In the words of Dale Anastasi who grows lemon indoors at the University of Kentucky's Robinson Substation at Quincross, "It takes no frost or legardeman to produce lemons in Kentucky. All that is needed is a dwarf lemon tree, a five-gallon container filled with soil to set it in, a sunny window in winter, and a sunny place to put the tree outdoors in summer."

Millersburg fire bell removed

The old fire bell on top of the Millersburg fire house was removed Monday afternoon, May 10, by a crane. No one, not even the elderly people of Millersburg can say how long it's been there, only that it's been there as long as they can remember. The manufacturer's date on the bell is 13-28-28. Mayor Chouteau Layson said this was the removal of the bell who the crane was in town. They said they'd decide how to dispose of it at a later date.

The bell tower holding the bell was rotting and the bell was in danger of falling and damaging the city fire truck. The W.H. Stamler Corp. had made arrangements for a crane to be in town to remove it on Monday to do some building work for the company so the City Council decided to go ahead with the removal of the bell who the crane was in town. They said they'd decide how to dispose of it at a later date. Councilwoman Edith Beeding went on record as being opposed to selling "a part of our history."

Mayor Layson, when asked what he thought should be done with the bell, replied, "I don't think the ladies (of Millersburg) would let us sell it." Several members of the Millersburg Volunteer Fire Department expressed a wish that it be a part of their new fire house.

For the best success in growing lemons, Anastasi recommends the following potting recipe: One gallon each of sterilized garden soil, perlite or vermiculite, and sphagnum peat moss; three tablespoons of 0-20-4 phosphate; and three tablespoons of lime. Potting soil can be used, but when using regular garden soil it will be much better if it is sterilized. To do this, cover the soil with aluminum foil to help retain the moisture and bake in the kitchen oven along with a potato. When the potato is done, so is will be the same. Put this mixture in the pot or other container, set in the tree, water, and you will see well on your way toward having a living room orchard.

There are dwarf lemons and oranges as well as lemons and these trees which can be secured from several commercial nurseries. These grow to a height of about three feet. They need reporting about every two years to maintain the taste quality of the fruit and will also need fertilized from time to time.

For this part of lemon culture, Anastasi says a tablespoon of 20-20-20 fertilizer in a gallon of water will do the trick. While the tree is in the outside, it should be watered with this solution every two weeks, especially if there is a lot of sunshine. In winter, it should be treated to this feeding every two months. When feeding with this solution, water until moisture can be seen seeping out the bottom of the container. At other times when the tree seems to be needing moisture, use plain water.

An indoor lemon tree requires little care beyond what has already been mentioned. If it should become infested with scale insects or aphids while indoors, treat with ordinary orchard sprays recommended by county Extension agents. In the spring, prune out the weak branches just as you would an apple tree in the orchard.

After all this has been done, the tree will more or less take care of itself. If too much fruit sets on, it will regulate the crop by dropping some of it and just as with any other fruit tree, the fewer the lemons, the larger they are.
