CB'ers to solve tv problems

There are 25 million CB transmitters operating along side 123 million tv receivers today. Unfortunately, many tv's are not manufactured with proper filtering devices to filter outside interference. The Federal Communications Commission (FCC), has been unable to cope with the more than 100,000 complaints on TV interference (TVI), many of which are blaming CB radios. The problem can only get worse, for another million CB's are expected to be operating after Christmas.

The International CB Radio Operators' Association, CBA, with headquarters in Roanoke, Va., is establishing 25,000 Watch Officers across the country to organize platoons of CB operators, hams, and tv repairmen, to combat this problem.

A cooperative national effort is being made by the Electronics Industry Association, EIA, CBA and FCC to educate the public and implement corrective measures.

Beta Thorton, speaking for CBA said, "The problem can only be solved on the grass-roots level. The CBA clubs will supply the local citizens with corrective procedures furnished by the FCC and EIA. In some cases the answer lies in a simple adjustment of an antenna or a two dollar filter."

The national network of Watch Officers will help self-regulation of the airways, reduce CB theft and stamp out TVI. The program will also be especially valuable in times of disaster, emergency, or as a public service to the community.

KU Central Division turns down union

Kentucky Utilities Company recently received certification from the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) that employees of the company's Central Division voted in an election on Oct. 14 against representation by the United Steel Workers of America as the employees' collective bargaining representative. The election was conducted by the NLRB among operating, production, maintenance, and construction employees.

The Central Division, with headquarters at Danville, includes employees working at the E.W. Brown Generating Station and its operations in the central portion of the state including the Danville, Campbellsville, Elizabethton, Richmond, and Shelbyville districts. The division is one of four geographic divisions of KU.

In an election on Sept. 9, employees of the Western Division voted in favor of collective bargaining representation by the same union. The Western Division includes the Green River Generating Station and the company's Morganfield, Barlow, Dawson Springs, Earlington, and Greenville districts.

Last May, KU's Blue Grass Division employees rejected representation by the Steelworkers in a similar election conducted by the labor relations board. Lexington is the largest city in the Blue Grass division, which includes the KU generating stations at Ghent and Tyrone and district headquarters at Lexington, Carrollton, Georgetown, Mayville, Mt. Sterling, Paris, Versailles, and Winchester.

Kentucky Utilities' Mountain Division employees, including those in KU's subsidiary in Virginia, Old Dominion Power Company, are represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO. The Mountain Division includes the Pineville Generating Station and operations in five counties in southwestern Virginia and nine counties in southeastern Kentucky, including districts headquartered at Pineville, Harlan, London, Middleboro, and Somerset, Ky., and Norton and Big Stone Gap, Va.
