Burley tobacco cooperative marketing has progressed a long way in 50 years

by Nancy Hayes Stroup
in Kentucky Farmer

The Pool, otherwise known as the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association, is that magical organization which saved the burley tobacco industry from financial disaster.

Although the Association is now over 50 years old, its youth was not an easy one.

The marketing system for burley tobacco, like the course of true love, had not run sweetly or smoothly. Growers celebrated prices of $32.66 per hundredweight in 1919, and then watched them plummet to a low of $13.37 the very next year. Often a farmer could not even meet the cost of production. This was wreaking economic havoc on the entire farming industry.

Fortunately, help was on the way. Judge Robert W. Bingham, then publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times and a respected jurist and citizen, conferred with Bernard Baruch, a famed business and financial wizard who later served on the staff of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Together they surveyed the bleak situation and decided that the only feasible solution was cooperative marketing. They consulted several other experts, and in 1921 organized a committee to sign burley growers to a contract. This contract would make the grower a member of a cooperative society, to which he would pay a membership fee and deliver for sale all leaf of burley tobacco that he grew for the next five years.

The committee knew that they would have to have at least 75% of all the growers signed in order for the system to work. By November of the same year, 85% of the growers who had produced burley in 1920 had signed into the cooperative society. The new association, called the Cooperative Marketing System, was declared in operation, with headquarters at Lexington, Ky.

At that point, problems came on thick and fast. It was discovered that Kentucky had no cooperative marketing law under which the new organization could legally operate, so it was incorporated under a law in North Carolina. Meanwhile, Judge Bingham drafted the necessary law for Kentucky and rushed it through both houses of the Kentucky General Assembly, which passed it by unanimous vote. It was signed into law in 1922, and the first charter issued under the new law was to the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association.

This did not mark the end of the Association's troubles. The Association was, in effect, a sales agent for the tobacco grower. Growers who were members handed over their crops after harvest and received an advance payment, and then subsequent payments after the crop was sold.

There was still no guaranteed price; the farmer received the best price that could be obtained. However, growers who were not members were able to sell their tobacco at loose-leaf warehouses and get their money all at once. This troubled the cooperative movement because they were unable to renew contracts when they expired.

So many farmers went back to the old way of selling their crops that the Pool's operations were suspended after 1927. Once again the industry began to suffer, although it was not alone; the entire country was sinking into a depression.

During the Great Depression, the Federal Government became intensely interested in the agricultural and economic affairs of the country. Out of the depression came new laws and reforms which changed many of the old organizations, including the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association.

The old Association was merely a "caretaker," while the new Association became actively involved in the price-support program which was coming into being with the help of money borrowed from the Federal Government.

Today the purposes of the Association are varied. It is not involved just with price supports, but also with promoting the cooperative marketing of tobacco; market stabilization; borrowing money and making monetary advances to members; acting as agents in activities concerning tobacco, such as contracting for the handling, processing, storage, and marketing of tobacco; and increasing the sale and use of tobacco and tobacco products.

Perhaps the most important function, however, and its greatest success, is to upgrade the lives of burley tobacco growers, the dream of Judge Bingham over 50 years ago.

State Treasurer Frances Mills reports on compensating balance

FRANKFORT—State Treasurer, Frances Jones Mills, has announced that effective Oct. 1, 1976, the compensating balance maintained in the State's General Depository Account at the Farmers Bank & Capital Trust Company has been eliminated. This makes available to the Treasurer an additional $20,000,000 for overnight and weekend investments.

When Mrs. Mills assumed the office of State Treasurer in January, 1976, she announced that she would study the banking practices of the Treasurer's Office, with increased investment revenue as her goal. The first result of her effort has been the new policy in regard to time deposits, which are now tied to the U.S. Treasury bill rate.

After consultation with her staff and with bank officials, it was agreed that the State's checking account can be maintained without a minimum balance, primarily due to efficiencies achieved through the use of advanced data processing equipment. This represents the third change in the process through which the State earns interest on its daily working balance since the arrangement was begun in December, 1973.

The original compensating balance maintained was $30,000,000. After six months of operation, the balance was reduced to $25,000,000, and at the end of the first year that the investment policy was in effect, the minimum balance was reduced to $20,000,000.

Through Sept. 30th, the Treasurer has received more than $2,500,000 in interest from the General Depository during 1976. The removal of the compensating balance requirement, along with the normal daily investment, should result in additional income to the Treasurer of nearly $1,000,000 by the end of this year.

sets up endowment at UK

A Louisville businessman has given $50,000 to the University of Kentucky to encourage and reward the development of composition skills, in honor of his deceased wife and her lifelong interest in good writing.

Albert L. Entwistle, Louisville, a franchise agent for a national company, has set up an endowment which every school year will award $500 each to six students at UK who have demonstrated the greatest improvement in composition skills.

"We are delighted," said UK president Otis Singletary, "with Mr. Entwistle's generous gift to support a cause we feel strongly about, the encouragement of better writing by our students."

The prizes are a memorial to Mrs. Entwistle, a native of Frankfort, who attended UK in 1926-27 and maintained until her death a deep interest in good writing and a lively affection for the University of Kentucky. Mrs. Entwistle, who died this past March, for a time was secretary to a former Louisville Courier-Journal publisher, Mark Ethridge.

Entwistle expects the program to "Develop an incentive for University of Kentucky students in all courses and from all walks of life to take a keen interest in better English".

Entries are not confined to work done in English classes. Any class requiring moderate or substantial amounts of writing may produce candidates for the Entwistle Prizes, which will be awarded for the first time next May.

Bryant chairs a faculty-staff committee of six persons who will publicize the competition throughout the University, accept nominations for the prizes, and judge entries.

Entwistle is considering the extension of his prizes to a secondary school and an elementary school. Decision about this move will be made after Entwistle and a consultant, Mrs. Martha Hundley, a Louisville English teacher, study together with UK officials the effectiveness of the program's first year at UK.

Hit and run accident reported

Mrs. Catherine Hollar's car was hit in the trunk while it was parked beside her home on Mulberry Street around 2 a.m. Saturday.

Considerable damage was done to Mrs. Hollar's blue car when the hit and run vehicle ran upon the Mulberry Street bank after pushing the Hollar car to the Locust Street corner. City police surmised that the striking vehicle was damaged in the right front fender.

CALORIE COUNTDOWN

BY SUSAN DUFF MASTRO

FRUITY DESSERTS FOR DIETERS

Almost everyone craves something sweet to eat at one time or another, and dieters are hardly exempt from these desires. Most diet experts recommend the waist-watchers munch a piece of fruit when they feel the urge to appease a sweet tooth, but fruits don't always fill the bill. Sometimes what you really want is a mouth-watering luscious dessert after a calorie-controlled meal. Try these fruit dessert recipes. Non-dieting family members will probably enjoy them as much as you will.

CANTABERRY PARFAIT

Wash and drain two cups raspberries, then force through a wire strainer to puree them. Cut one large cantaloupe into bite-sized cubes, discarding seeds and rind. Combine melon chunks with the berry puree and serve in fancy ice cream dishes.

This recipes makes 8 servings, 33 calories each.

MELON A LA FRAISE

Remove caps from one cup strawberries and mash fruit as you combine it with a tablespoon of sugar and two tablespoons lemon juice. Use a blender for the task if you like.) Halve and deseed two medium-sized cantaloupes, pour strawberry into center of each and chill for at least an hour in the refrigerator. Makes 8 servings, 85 calories each.

FRUTA FLORIDIANA

Combine one 16-ounce can of fruit cocktail sections, drained, with sections of two oranges and chill the fruit for 2 hours in the refrigerator. Divide the chilled fruit combination into 6 dessert serving dishes. Using a melon baller, scoop out balls of one cup pineapple sherbet and top each fruit dish with the sherbet scoops. Garnish each with several mint sprigs. Makes 8 servings, 68 calories each.

PEACHY MELYUM

Skin, pit and halve four large ripe peaches. Place halves in a baking dish or shallow casserole, sprinkle with four teaspoons brown sugar, and one teaspoon cinnamon. Bake at 300 degrees F., for 10 minutes, then place under broiler for three minutes to brown.

THE CARLISLE MERCURY

NOTICE TO PUBLIC

Notice is hereby given that Kentucky Utilities Company has filed with the Public Service Commission of Kentucky an Application to modify its small rate Fuel Clause.

If the average cost of fuel consumed by the Company's generating stations is in excess of or less than 36.492 cents per million BTU, as determined from the Company's most recent month's operating reports available; prior to the beginning of the month, an additional charge or credit will be made on the kilowatt-hours purchased by the customer at the rate of .00113 cent per kilowatt-hour for each .1 cent or fraction thereof of variation in the cost of fuel above or below 36.492 cents per million BTU for that month's billing

The effect of this modification upon its customers would be to reduce the time between fuel expense incurrence and its recovery through Fuel Clause application. In moving from the present three month calculation period to the proposed one month calculation period there will be two months' fuel expense eliminated from recovery under the Fuel Clause. The Company has requested authority to recover this amount prorated over the next twelve months, by surcharge. This does not constitute an increase in rates.

This Application is set for public hearing at the offices of the Public Service Commission in the Capitol Plaza Tower, Frankfort, Kentucky, on October 19, 1976, at 9:00 A.M., E.D.T. 9-30-3tchg.

MAGICWORD

HOW TO PLAY: Read the list of words. Look at the puzzle. You'll find these words in all directions — horizontally, vertically, diagonally, backwards. Draw a circle around each letter of a word found in the puzzle then strike it off list. Circling it will show a letter has been used but will leave it visible should it also form part of another word. Find the big words first. When letters of all listed words are circled, you'll have the given number of letters left over. They'll spell out your MAGICWORD.
