Waterfowl hunting seasons announced

The 1976-77 waterfowl hunting seasons and limits announced today by the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources are virtually unchanged from last year except that two Canada geese may be included in the statewide daily bag limit and differing point values have been assigned to some species of ducks.

The statewide season for ducks, coots and mergansers will again be split into two sections, the first opening Nov. 20 and continuing through Dec. 2 and the second opening Dec. 11 and running through Jan. 16. For geese, the statewide season will open Nov. 18 and continue through Jan. 20.

For ducks and mergansers the daily bag limit will be reached when the point value of the last bird taken, added to the total point values of the other ducks already taken that day, reaches or exceeds 100 points. Point values are: 100, canvasback; 70, hen mallard, black duck, wood duck, redhead, hooded merganser; 10, pintail, blue-winged, green-winged and cinnamon teal, gadwall, shoveler, scup and other mergansers; 25, drake mallard and Dec. 11 through Jan. 20 for geese and Dec. 11 through Jan. 15 for ducks. Statewide limits will apply on the area and reservations (by letter only) will be accepted from Sept. 3 through Sept. 17.

Save Money By Degrees!

There are many ways to save energy and money at the same time. One easy way is to enjoy those good weather days that require neither heating or cooling. Many of us have been sozzled by thermostat controlled heating and cooling that we use one or the other even when it's not needed. Yet each degree you raise your thermostat in the summer will save about 5% of your air conditioning costs. So set that thermostat high in summer, wear light clothing and save both energy and money.

In winter, wear heavier clothing and keep your thermostat setting as low as you can without sacrificing comfort. Every degree over 70, adds about 3 percent to your heating bill. So in cold weather try 68 degrees and you'll pay less every month.

People have been talking about thermostat savings for years. Now, it's time to convert talking to doing. For more information about energy saving, contact your cooperative. Energy saving is everybody's business.

Our county officials

Who are they and what do they do?

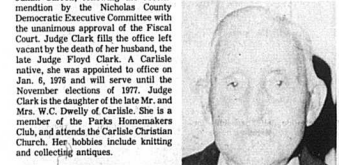

by Jimmy Smith The following article is being published by The Carlisle Mercury in order to allow the people of Nicholas County to become better acquainted with their County Officials. It will contain a brief sketch on each of the officials, pointing out their outstanding civic involvements as well as other interesting facts concerning their roles as elected officials.

First of two articles.

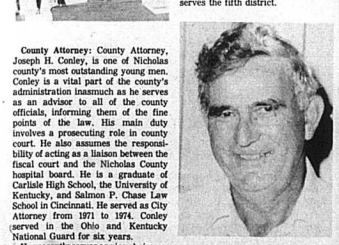

Eugene Booth, who represents District 4, was born at his old home place on the Locust Grove Road in Nicholas county. He attended the old Locust Grove School. Booth owns a farm here in the county on Stony Creek where he spends his time working the land. Booth is also employed by an insurance company as a repairman. He and his wife, the former Blanch Field, have two children, Robert Watkins, and Lois Broderick, and they attended the Carlisle Methodist Church.

County Judge: The Honorable Millard Clark, County Judge of Nicholas County, holds the distinctive position of being the only female judge in the state of Kentucky. Judge Clark, who resides on West Main Street in Carlisle, was appointed to serve in the office of county judge by Kentucky's Governor, Julian Carroll, following the recommendation by the Nicholas County Democratic Executive Committee with the unanimous approval of the Fiscal Court. Judge Clark fills the office left vacant by the death of her husband, the late Judge Floyd Clark. A Carlisle native, she was appointed to office on Jan. 6, 1975 and will serve until the November elections of 1977. Judge Clark is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. W.C. Dweily of Carlisle. She is a member of the Parks Homemakers Club, and attends the Carlisle Christian Church. Her hobbies include knitting and collecting antiques.

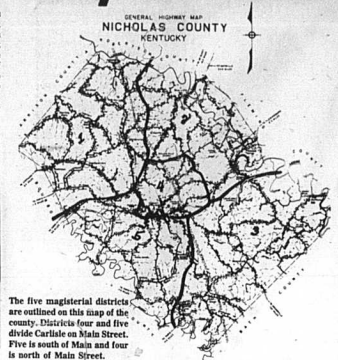

Joe Sapp has lived all but three years of his life in Nicholas county. Born in Lewis county, Sapp moved to Nicholas county when his family moved here three years later. He attended the Taylor Creek-Island Chapel School. Sapp and his wife live on their farm at Jacktown, on the Otislow Road. He and his wife, the former Viola Herrin, have three children, Clay, Luther, and Roy. Clay still resides in Nicholas county while the other two sons live in Bourbon county at the present time. Mr. Sapp serves the fifth district.

County Attorney: County Attorney, Joseph H. Conley, is one of Nicholas county's most outstanding young men. Conley is a vital part of the county's administration inasmuch as he serves as an advisor to all of the county officials, informing them of the fine points of the law. His main duty involves a prosecuting role in county court. He also assumes the responsibility of acting as a liaison between the fiscal court and the Nicholas County official board. He is a graduate of Carlisle High School, the University of Kentucky, and Salmon P. Chase Law School in Cincinnati. He served as City Attorney from 1971 to 1974. Conley served in the Ohio and Kentucky National Guard for six years.

He presently serves as vice chairman of the Blue Grass Regional Crime Council. He has been Nicholas county representative on the Council for the last five years. Conley represents the county on the Blue Lick Area Citizens' Commission of which he is treasurer. He is a charter member and vice president of the Nicholas County Historical Society, and has served as Bicentennial co-ordinator for the county for the past two years. Some of his civic achievements include being named outstanding young man by the Blue Jayces in 1972, and outstanding state chairman of the Kentucky Jayces also in 1972. He is a former president of the Carlisle Jayces and of the Nicholas County Chamber of Commerce. Conley is married to the former Joan Wessinger of Lexington who is editor of the Carlisle Mercury. They have three children, Mike, 15, Kay, 14, and Meg, 11.

The Magistrates: The main role of the magistrates in Nicholas county is to serve on the Fiscal Court. The magistrates function as important decision makers in the county's administration, they also have the power to perform marriages in the county. Although not practiced in Nicholas county, the magistrates could also have powers of minor judicial nature allocated to them. They can handle cases which do not exceed a fine of $500 or one year in prison. The magistrates are elected to four year terms on a district basis.

The five magisterial districts are outlined on this map of the county. Districts four and five divide Carlisle on Main Street. Five is south of Main and four is north of Main Street.

Walter Tevis, who taught English and French at Carlisle High School for several years in the early 50's, has written another book which has recently been released as a movie. He wrote "The Man Who Fell to Earth," a pure science fiction, which is now playing at a movie theatre in Lexington. Previously he wrote the "Hustler," later made into a movie. Originally from Richmond, he now teaches at Ohio University at Athens. He sold his first story to Esquire Magazine while he was in college in the home now owned by Lee Bentz on Broadway and North Sta. (Abraham house). According to Dr. Frank Mathias of Dayton, Ohio from whom the above information was obtained, Tevis told him the following story about a student at Carlisle High School:

Bobby Gene Price is a local farmer and factory worker who has spent nearly all of his life in Nicholas county. Price, representing the first district, is a veteran of the Korean War, and he makes his living by farming and working for Blue Grass Knitting. He is a graduate of Carlisle High School and attends the Saltwell Methodist Church. He is married to the former Phyllis Gaunce and they have three children, Rick, 18, Jim, 16, and Nyri, 17.

Born and reared in Nicholas county, Paul Tischer is like many of the other magistrates in that he makes his living on the farm. Tischer is a former Southern States Director and a Farm Bureau Director. He is married to the former Phyllis Goodley and has four children, Paul Jr., Kathy, John David, and James William. Tischer serves the second district.

He's here to attend class and study very hard. The boy jumped at the offer—mudging his friend because he thought he had made an "A" already. After school, the boy was allowed to break the balls, scoring two in the pockets. Tevis took over the cleared the ball. The boy stuck to his agreement and attended the class thereafter. We wish we knew the boy's name! May he come forward and tell us
