New court system explained

(Editor's Note: This is part three of a six-part series on the structure of Kentucky's new judicial system, whose implementation will be completed Jan. 1, 1978. This story deals with the Kentucky Court of Justice's appellate court system, which is already in operation.)

FRANKFORT — In November, 1975, Kentucky voters approved an amendment to the state Constitution which restructured the state's system of courts. Part of the judicial reform created a state Supreme Court, and this new court, along with the Court of Appeals and the circuit courts, now form the state's appellate court system.

"Before Jan. 1, 1976, the Court of Appeals was the state's highest court, hearing appeals mainly from circuit courts and sometimes direct appeals from the police, county/quarterly and magisterial courts on special matters," explained William Davis, executive director of the Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC).

But after January 1976, the Supreme Court became the highest court, placed above the Court of Appeals. "The Supreme Court usually hears cases from the Court of Appeals. But in instances of sentences of the death penalty or imprisonment of 20 or more years, the court will hear directly from the circuit courts," Mr. Davis said.

The Supreme Court is comprised of seven justices, one elected from each of the state's seven appellate districts. Presently, the chief justice, who is elected by his fellow justices, is Justice John S. Palmore of Owensboro. He recently replaced Justice Scott Reed of Lexington in that post.

The next level of courts, the Court of Appeals, still hears appeals from circuit courts, and may, if granted authority by rule of court, also hear direct appeals from lower courts on matters concerning governmental administrative agencies. Fourteen appeals judges are elected, two from each of the seven appellate districts. The court meets in panels of three throughout the state.

Mr. Davis explained that the current appellate jurisdiction of the lowest level of appellate courts, circuit courts, involves matters tried in police, county/quarterly and magisterial courts, which are concerned with misdemeanors and civil suits involving amounts up to $500. But, he noted, "These courts will be merged in January into one district court system."

(The district courts will still consider misdemeanor violations, but their civil jurisdiction will be raised to consider suits involving up to $1,500.)

"Kentucky is divided into 56 judicial circuits, which are served by 87 elected judges," Mr. Davis said. "In January, the circuit courts will handle appeals on the same misdemeanors as they do now, and on the civil suits involving up to $1,500.

"The circuit courts will have the same general trial jurisdiction over felony cases, but the jurisdiction on civil suits has been raised to involve suits of more than $1,500," Mr. Davis said.

The circuit courts will also hear appeals from administrative agencies, Mr. Davis said.

County fires extinguished

The Nicholas County Fire Department answered two fire calls recently according to Fire Chief Woody Wilson.

They extinguished a fire at the home of Sherman Green on Bufalo Trace on Dec. 10. Fire Chief Wilson said cause of the fire was an overheated stove.

Fire and smoke caused about $2,000 damage at the residence of Stanley Frederick about four miles east of Carlisle on Route 36 Dec. 7, Mr. Wilson stated. Floor joists around the chimney ignited, he said, as a result of a bad chimney.

Kentucky to initiate staggered vehicle registration program

FRANKFORT — Kentucky is embarking on a new staggered vehicle registration program designed to reduce the waiting lines at county courthouses, according to the state Department of Transportation (KYDOT).

KYDOT Division of Motor Vehicle Regulation Commissioner O. B. Arnold said license plates will be available at county courthouses by January 1, 1978.

"We are now moving to a staggered registration whereby license plates will be issued according to the month of vehicle purchase," Mr. Arnold said. "The program will take about six years to phase in," he said.

As in previous years, all cars must be licensed by March 1, and trucks, which are not included in the new system, must be licensed by April. However, when new cars are purchased during 1978, and as out-of-state vehicles are licensed in Kentucky, new tags will carry new renewal dates.

Mr. Arnold explained that a new car licensed in April, 1978, must be renewed by the end of March, 1979.

The new 1978 license plates are manufactured by a firm in Mississippi — not by Kentucky prison industries as in previous years. And several changes have been made on the new tags.

The white plates with blue letters will be issued to last through the next five years so they are made of thicker metal than the old tags which alternated colors each year. The tags will be updated with a yearly renewal sticker near the center of the license plate.

A county name also will be placed across the bottom of the plate and may be changed from year to year if a vehicle registration is renewed in a different county.

One advantage of the new system will be uniform fees for vehicle registration, Mr. Arnold said. He noted that in past years, if a vehicle was registered in the middle of the year, the registration fee was adjusted.

But with the new staggered system, a flat fee of $12.50 is charged and the renewal date is moved to 12 months from issuance.

Starlicide available to farmers, feedlots

FRANKFORT — Agriculture Commissioner Thomas Harris announced today that in response to requests from several counties, the department is making Starlicide available to farmers and feedlot operators in an effort to control blackbirds and starlings.

Starlicide, a poison which affects birds only, is not harmful to humans, livestock, or wildlife. The preparation is placed on the ground around feedlot operations troubled with bird infestation. The bait, approved by the U. S. Department of Fish and Wildlife, was discussed and recommended at the blackbird conference held in Frankfort in October.

Mr. Harris said, "Starlicide is being made available free of charge to farmers and feedlot operators, providing county agents verify the need." Starlicide and PA—14 are the only bird control substances approved for use by the federal government.

"There are five counties in Kentucky which have sizeable roosts at this time," Mr. Harris added, "and naturally, farmers in these localities will be given priority. We intend to treat roosts with PA—14 again this year, but each roost must be inspected and approved by officials of the Department of Fish and Wildlife before spraying, and of course, the weather conditions must be exactly right."

Mr. Harris said that so far none of the known roosts in Kentucky have had an official inspection. "We are in contact with the federal people and expect to be able to announce our plans for blackbird control sometime next week," Mr. Harris said.

New size limit on bass Dec. 31

All annual Kentucky resident and non-resident sport hunting and fishing licenses expire on the last day of the year, so outdoorsmen should remember to purchase their 1978 licenses before talking to the woods or waters, Mitchell said. Licenses are available at all county court clerks' offices and at many sporting goods stores.

The new size limit on largemouth, smallmouth and Kentucky (or spotted) bass will be 12 inches effective Jan. 1, 1978. The increase from 10 to 12 inches was made, according to Mitchell, for a variety of sound biological reasons.

"Our biologists feel that the 12-inch size on black bass will be among our most effective management tools and should improve the quality of bass fishing throughout the commonwealth," Mitchell said.

According to fish and game regulations, bass (and other sport fish which have size limits may be measured from the "terminal end of the lower jaw to the tip of the longest tail fin". All fish smaller than the minimum "must be returned immediately to the waters from which they were taken in the best physical condition possible".

The other size limits in Kentucky are: walleye, 15 inches; muskellunge, 30 inches and rockfish (striped bass), 15 inches.
