

NOTICE

There has been no penalty added to anyone's gas bills because of the gas shortage.

The unusually high bills received this last week include from 12 to 16 days in addition to the regular monthly billing. They also reflect the coldest weather to date.

casts," especially with the cheaper radios.

The version of the warning radio that is recommended for institutions such as schools also has a battery recharger, external antenna lead, greater sensitivity, a warning light, and other sophisticated features. It sells for around $75.

Some school systems such as Fayette and Daviess counties, have one in every public school.

Kentucky is the first state to have the weather broadcast statewide. The first station went into operation May 1, 1975. While recent weather has stimulated sales of the weather radios and some stores report that they have been sold out at times, use of the radios still is not widespread.

The radios "definitely have helped people" with news of weather and road conditions, according to Robert S. Roberts, director of Disaster and Emergency Services for Owensboro-Daviess County Dist. He noted, "The real test will be in the spring. The tornado season is fast approaching."

Jim Matthews, director of Disaster and Emergency Services for the state, said, "We are hoping that more people will own the sets by spring" so they can be alerted to dangerous weather conditions.

The weather warning system is a cooperative arrangement between the state and the NWS. The NWS provides information, transmitters, lines, antennas, hardware and tape machines. Kentucky, Ind., station and at eight state locations: Mayfield, Bowling Green, Hazard, Somerset, Louisville, Lexington, Covington and Ashland.

Warenecke said that the NWS had initially proposed a system that would have covered only 80 per cent of the state but he told them, "We have no second-class citizens in Kentucky," and held out for the current system which reaches all parts of the state.

The system will be perfected by Jan. 1, 1979, when KEMS will complete microwave towers which will link the transmitters with the forecasting center, Warenecke said. Until then the system is dependent on overground lines which could be blown or knocked down.
