The Nicholas County High School Bluejacket varsity season opens Aug. 26 at Richmond. Junior High season opens Sept. 5 here against Mason County. Varsity has 11 games scheduled and "hopefully playoffs," according to Coach Steve Pumphrey. Junior High has four games scheduled and "we hope to have a state game schedule ending the last Monday in October."

Homecoming set July 24; dinner served

The Woods Chapel Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, Millersburg, will hold Homecoming Services on Sunday, July 24. The morning worship starts at 11 a.m. The afternoon service starts at 3 p.m. Dinner will be served Sunday all day, according to Rev. Marion M. McCaffrey Jr., pastor.

Payments to wheat farmers nearly certain, ASCS says

Unless there is an increase in wheat prices over the next few months, wheat farmers will receive federal payments this fall, according to Anna L. Connor of the local ASCS office.

Under the current wheat program deficiency payments are to be made to producers if the national average market price for the first five months of the marketing year is less than the target price of $2.47 per bushel.

The preliminary national average wheat price for all farmers was $2.00 per bushel in June, compared with $2.19 in May. Just in for the first month of the five-month period used to determine if deficiency payments, shortly after Oct. 31 to be made. This is the first time such payments would be made to wheat farmers under the 1973 Farm Act.

The deficiency payment rate is determined by subtracting from the $2.47 target price the higher of the July-October national average price or and are available from G.O.P. county chairman.

G.O.P. campaign kickoff luncheon set Saturday

Ominous fog enshrouds state

FRANKFORT—Ominous fog enshrouded the state recently when little air movement combined with normal industry and traffic to cause poor air conditions. It made more than a few people wonder, "What can be done about it, especially if it gets worse?"

What could have been done, had the situation worsened, was enactment of "replanned abatement strategies" by the state Division of Air Pollution. The strategies, or emission reduction plans, call for reduction of air contaminant emissions by industry and some regulation of traffic flows in cities with air pollution problems.

"Our emission reduction plans are primarily aimed at major industries," says John Smither, director of the division. "On a given day the pollutant responsible for poor conditions or an alert situation might be particulates, sulfur dioxide or any other pollutant and we can require emission reductions of industries emitting that particular pollutant."

The division knows the source of various air pollutants because state regulations require sources of air contaminants to apply for construction and operating permits with the state Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection. Required in the applications is an analysis of the properties and volume of air contaminants based on samples taken under normal operating conditions. Also required is formulation of standby plans by the industry if a reduction or elimination of emissions becomes necessary.

When an alert level is reached, as it was in May in Lexington, Louisville and Northern Kentucky, industries are required to put their standby plans into operation and reduce emissions by 25 percent.

Specifically, sulfur or oil-fired electric generating plants are requested to use fuels having low ash and sulfur content. Sulfur conduct wet-scrubbing only be used between 10 and 4 p.m. when atmospheric turbulence is highest.

For chemical, petroleum refining and primary metals industries, reductions of emissions are to be achieved by "cutting, postponing or deferring" production and all operations.

If air conditions go beyond the alert stage to warning or emergency conditions the division can require maximum reduction or closing of pollution sources. With major vehicles, persons are requested to use public transportation and are urged not to drive in downtown areas in cities unless absolutely necessary.

"We can also ask the Department of Transportation to cease work on any projects that are causing traffic congestion," Smither said, adding that while transportation is discouraged it is best to keep existing traffic moving to reduce pollution. The division is considering drafting regulations that would require auto emission inspections, but legislation won't be ready until next year.

Presently monitoring stations are operating in Ashland, Henderson, Louisville, Lexington, Newport, Owensboro and Paducah. Pollution levels for major pollutants, carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide and total suspended particulates are determined thru air samples taken daily in those cities and converted to a number on a scale of 0 to 300. When the total for all four pollutants reaches 200 or more (except for ozone, with a 117 limit), an alert is called for that locale, addressing the specific pollutant.
