The biggest energy problem!

America's biggest energy problem right now is us! We make up only 6% of the globe's population but we use up more than 34% of the energy that is consumed! When it comes to energy, we don't know when to stop. We continue to buy big cars that are gas guzzlers. We talk about raising thermostats in warm weather and lowering them in winter. But obviously we don't do it. We talk about, hear about, and read about ways of conserving energy. But up to now, we haven't saved enough to make a real difference.

Our consumption of energy still is outracing our ability to produce it. We're heading for big trouble.

The only answer that makes sense is that we've waiting for absolute disaster before we do anything that matters. And that doesn't make sense. Why must we wait till tragedy strikes before we act? In January, three weeks of cold weather threw about one million Americans out of work for a time. That should have been enough warning for anybody. This cooperative will continue to provide energy saving suggestions. When disaster strikes, we'll find no joy in saying, "we told you."
