Farm news briefs

by Gary Huddleston

A key question for farmers experimenting with loose-leaf marketing of burley tobacco has been—which of two methods, baling or sheeting, will work best for cigarette manufacturers.

That question should be answered at an April 15 meeting in Lexington, when the companies are expected to reveal which of the two new methods they prefer.

Either baling or sheeting could save growers between 40 and 50 percent of the cost of preparing tobacco for market, and farmers who have taken part in a three-year experimental program are enthusiastic about the results.

The meeting, which is expected to draw large numbers of tobacco growers, is set for 1:30 p.m., in the Agriculture Science Center on the University of Kentucky campus.

In a related development, Kentucky Farm Bureau President J. Robert Wade has asked for a meeting with Agriculture Secretary Robert Bergland, following published reports saying Bergland would oppose federal grading and price supports for loose leaf burley.

In a strongly worded letter to Bergland, Wade said farmers greeted the secretary's reported opposition with "stunned disbelief," and added that burley growers "deserve a fair and unprejudiced hearing before USDA officials on loose-leaf marketing of burley."

The issue is cost, Wade noted, and the three years of experimentation on baling and sheeting have indicated the new methods could save farmers up to $25 million per year in labor costs.

"Surely you could not oppose the notion of reduced expense to farmers," Wade told Bergland. "That has been the sole objective of our experiment, and these savings are the reason we consider the experiment a success."

Prospects are fading for a massive overhaul of existing farm legislation by Congress this year, with lawmakers and farm spokesmen both calling for extension of current programs with some modification.

Federal support programs for feed grains, rice and cotton are set to expire this year, and speculation has long centered on what changes to the existing law, passed in 1973, would be sought by Administration officials and Congress.

Two major bills have been docketed, one sponsored by Senate Agriculture Committee Chairman Herman Talmadge, and more recently, one from new Agriculture Secretary Robert Bergland. Both bills would retain most features of the 1973 law, while raising target prices and loan rates for most commodities to levels matching their estimated cost of production.

The American Farm Bureau, the nation's largest farm organization, opposed passage of the 1973 law, but this year, in a turnabout, has decided to support its extension for another five years. AFB opposes changing the way target prices and loan rates are computed, however, favoring their extension without change.

Proponents of increased supports for grains say the higher rates are necessary to protect farmers now that wheat and other grains are in surplus and prices down. Those opposed to raising target prices, including Farm Bureau, argue that artificially high support prices will lead to even more surplus production, at a time when producers should be cutting back their acreage to bring supply in line with demand.

Thousands of farmers in the nation's major grain producing areas could face bankruptcy if drought conditions continue in those areas, according to Donald Wilkinson, new governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

Wilkinson said farmers' financial troubles caused by dry weather "would strain the credit agency's lending capacity, but pledged to "stick with drought-plagued farmers as long as they are making an honest effort, are working closely with their lenders, and have a basis for credit."

The dry weather has affected development of winter wheat from Kansas to Kentucky, and summer grain crops, primarily corn and soybeans, may fare even worse if moisture is not forthcoming, soil scientists have said.

Wilkinson said most seasoned farmers can survive a year or two of bad weather, but his principal concern is with the starting farmer who hasn't built much equity, and with the cow-calf operator who has been suffering from poor weather conditions and low prices for several years.

Meetings are now being scheduled across Kentucky to explain a proposed farmer-financed national beef cattle promotional fund.

Slide-tape presentations are available for interested farm groups through Extension Service district offices, the Kentucky Beef Cattle Association and the Kentucky Farm Bureau.

A referendum is scheduled for early summer on the proposal. More than half of all livestock producers must vote, with a two-thirds vote of approval required for passage.

Should the national check-off gain approval, an existing state-level check-off of 10 cents per head of cattle marketed would probably be phased out, according to the state beef cattle association.

Public Housing Agencies invited to apply for funds

Public Housing Agencies in Kentucky are being invited to submit applications to administer the Section 8 Existing Housing Assistance Payments Program. The announcement was made recently by Virgil G. Kinnaird, Director of the Louisville Area Office, U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

One hundred and ninety-six units are available and the following counties have been invited to participate including Nicholas: Henry, Shelby, Spencer, Trimble, Bath, Menifee, Montgomery, Morgan, Bowan, Carroll, Gallatin, Grant, Owen, Pendleton, Carter, Elliott, Lawrence, Bracken, Fleming, Lewis, Mason, Robertson, Anderson, Estill, Franklin, Garrard, Harrison, Lincoln, Madison, Mercer and Powell.

The success of the Section 8 Existing program is largely dependent upon the participation of individual rental property owners. Their willingness to lease units to eligible families is crucial to the solution of the housing problem. HUD requires that the units be decent, safe, and sanitary. Fair Market Rents have been established for each community. The gross rent (which includes rent and tenant-paid utilities, if any) must fall within these established rents. In all cases, contract rents must be determined to be reasonable in relation to the quality, location and amenities furnished, the management and maintenance provided for the units.

When the tenant and owner have come to an agreement, the PHA must approve the lease, which may then be signed by the owner and the family. The PHA will then enter into a Housing Assistance Payments Contract with the owner. The owner will receive a monthly payment from the PHA equal to the difference between the rent payable to the owner by the family and the approved rent for the unit. The family's portion will not exceed 25% of its income.

Canal specialist to speak today

A specialist on the Panama Canal and a veteran U.S. foreign service officer will be featured speakers at a University of Kentucky seminar entitled "U.S. and the Panama Canal: Background and Current Prospects," tonight (March 31) in the UK Student Center from 3-4 p.m.

The speakers will be Dr. Lester Langley, associate professor of history at the University of Georgia, and Michael Yohn, special assistant for press relations, Bureau of Inter-American Relations in the U.S. Department of State.

The future of the Panama Canal with respect to the United States currently is one of the more controversial foreign policy issues both in the U.S. and the Republic of Panama.

Fatality rate lowest

FRANKFORT—Kentucky State Police have reported that this year's fatality rate for the month of February is the lowest since 1962.

State Police Lt. Ernest Bivens said, "We had predicted that more people would be killed because of an increase in traffic after the hard winter, but just the opposite happened." He said only 41 people were killed on the highways last month.

"Over the past 15 years," Bivens said, "we have averaged 58 deaths on Kentucky roads for this month."

The total for the year now stands at 112.
