Nutritive Value of Baby Food

Some store-bought baby foods are highly nutritious. Others are just so-so, according to a recent Cornell University study.

Most nutritious are the single-ingredient strained foods. The "combination dinners" just aren't worth the price. You'll be doing your baby a favor, for instance, if you buy a jar of strained carrots and a jar of strained chicken and mix them together yourself.

Cornell's researchers discovered that the combination dinners contain only small amounts of protein, and even smaller traces of iron.

The jars of vegetables and meat you mix together at home have three times as much protein, more than twice as much iron, and eight times as much vitamin A as the same quantity of the combination dinner you can buy.

Single-Ingredient Foods Cost Less

The separate foods are cheaper. They contain less water and broth, meaning more nutrients for your money.

Read the label. Ingredients are listed in descending order, according to how much of each one is contained in the jar of food.

For instance, if water, broth, starch, or sugar is one of the top few ingredients listed, it means there is a high percentage of it in the baby food—something you want to avoid.

The label may also tell you the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowances (RDA) of major nutrients contained in the food.

You Can Make Your Own

Don't forget that you can save money by cooking, mashing and straining your own foods for the baby. A blender is a big help there. And there are now some special little baby-food grinders on the market that make this job a cinch.

Don't prepare more than a two-day supply of food at a time. Be sure to refrigerate it immediately after preparation, or when baby has had enough.

Wallpaper's Getting Better All the Time

Wallpaper's been around since the late 16th century in England, but new processes and materials keep improving it for modern use. The do-it-yourselfer never has it so good, because wallcoverings are getting better all the time—easier to hang and take care of, and often more durable, too.

Regardless of its width, each single roll will cover approximately 30 square feet of surface.

Washable—you can spot-clean this wallpaper gently with lukewarm water and mild suds, but don't scrub it.

Scrubbable—you can do a more-energetic cleaning and washing job on this paper, but stick to the products recommended by the manufacturer, and follow the directions carefully.

Strippable—you can easily take this paper off the wall again, without steaming, to change the wall treatment. To hang it, use the product recommended—usually either liquid strippable paste or wheat paste.

Pre-trimmed—these wallcoverings are ready to apply without trimming—and without overlapping, because the selvage has been removed and the pattern runs right to the edge.

Pre-pasted—you don't need wallpaper paste, just a special water tray for wetting the paper.

11th Guild Fair May 19-22 in Berea

Berea—Dates for the 1977 Kentucky Guild of Artists & Craftsmen's Fair in Berea are May 19-22, and over 100 artists and craftsmen will participate. Additional features are local and regional musicians, the Berea Pup-petry Caravan, art and craft demonstrations, and special exhibitions.

Working demonstrations will include the potter's wheel, lathe wood turning, weaving, spinning, watercolor, candle-making, quilting, shingle splitting, corn grinding, leatherwork, carving, and printmaking. Artists and craftsmen come from Ashland, Fulton, and most points between for Kentucky's major art event.

Berea College's Indian Fort Theater, summer home of the outdoor drama "Wilderness Road", provides a scenic setting for the Fair. Colorful handmade tents are used to shelter the display areas, leaving ample room for hiking, picnicing, and enjoying Spring's natural splendor. Parking is free, and full service to visitors are provided.

Hours are 13 Noon to 9 p.m. Thursday (May 19); 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday (May 20 and 21); and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday (May 22).

For additional information on the fair or the Guild write to Garry Barker, Box 291, Berea, Ky. 40403 or call 606-986-3192.
