'Trick or Treat' Monday night

By Gene-Hughes
 children are still young enough to want to participate in "Trick or Treat," but for safety's sake they are asked to omit begging sweets from each house by the porch light on.

This year we do not have an exception as Mayor Bill Power has declared "Trick or Treat" night in Carlisle on Monday from 6:30 p.m. to 11 p.m.

Children under 12 are permitted to wear masks. These little goblins are welcomed by young and old alike as they ring the door bells of lighter homes. Children over 12, may not wear masks but do so with the younger children if they wish. Many of the latter are not lighted outside.

—Visit lighted homes between 6:30 p.m. only.

—Respect everyone's property. Do not stop windows or do any so-called "pranks."

—Wear clothing that is easily seen in the dark.

—Drive carefully through the city especially during these hours.

—Do not eat or overeat candy or chewing gum.

—Do not make Halloween a safe, fun time for everyone by adding to those simple rules set down for everyone's benefit.

—Do not approach any house which is not lighted outside.

New court judges will spend most time handling juvenile cases, research shows

By S. C. Van Curen
FRANKFORT — Kentucky's new four-tier judicial system, becoming fully effective the first of next month, requires that city, county, magistrate and juvenile courts, established in November 1975, and the 1976 legislature implemented the system.

Kentuckians approved the judicial system to further implement the district court system. Bill Davis, director of the Administrative Office of the Courts as head of the Supreme Court, much of the new system was implemented.

Justice John Patterson was elected by the other six justices as chief justice in Paul's place.

Heed gave as his reason for stepping down his desire to return to handling court cases and to "go back and write opinions."

He also said he thought a change at the head of the court would be good for all members of the court. He said the administrative duties of the Chief Justice are a heavy burden that kept him from "getting to the legal work of the court," a role he wishes to prefer over administrative duties.

He said he had carried on the general implementation of all four tiers of the new court system, and from the structured standpoint the work had been completed.

In his opinion, the new court system, particularly reduce the number of juvenile cases.

He went on to say that there district judge would be established if the need is proved after the other six justices as chief justice in Paul's place.

Stop that aesthet, now!

Marilyn Murray O'Hair, the self-anointed activist whose efforts successfully eliminated prayer in the public schools, is all right again. And she must be stopped this time.

She has been granted a hearing by the Communications Commission on the subject of religion on radio and TV. The hearing was granted after Mrs. O'Hair presented a petition (C. M. 2463) to the FCC, with 27,000 signatures, requesting the Commission to grant the petition would ultimately pave the way to eliminate the proliferation of religious programs via the airwaves of America.

Can you imagine the consequences of such a decision? The elderly, the shut-ins, those hospitalized, not to mention the majority of us who may not hear or watch a special religious or moral-based program, would be left out. So, such programs would not be permitted on radio or TV.

Many of these elderly and shut-ins depend on radio to fulfill their worship needs each week, simply because they are unable to go to a church.

Many of us also enjoy seeing or hearing a religious program on television. This is a part of the world we live in. Television, especially, has progressed down with more violence and obscenity in the last several years. The majority of us do not approve of this immoral trend. If Mrs. O'Hair has her way these immoral tendencies will be intensified, because should anything religious be incorporated into a program, it would be censored as has been done in the schools. This would only encourage more sex and violence on TV to fill the void.

No wonder many of our youth are becoming less interested in what is right. They are deprived of any religious or moral training in the schools, they witness increased sex and violence in TV, and many of them grow up thinking that is what the world is all about.

The Christian also presents the astronaut's petition message to the world as they were writing the motion in 1968. We can and should stop her this time. And, you can help! Send a letter immediately in favor of religious programs on television. Write the Communications Commission, 1919 "M" Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20541. Put the number of the petition (R. M. 2463) on the face of the envelope. Ask your friends to do the same.

We aren't advocating that anyone be forced to listen or watch religious programs. They can always be turned off, but we do strongly believe that religious programs should be made available for those who want them. Do your part by writing today!

(Editor's note: The following account was printed in the Oct. 28 issue of The Fleming Gazette. If anyone else has had a similar experience, we would be interested in hearing about it.)

According to Jackie Hughes, there was no burn marks on the ground where the apparent UFO (unidentified flying object) hovered.

"The cows were so spooked that they nearly bolted the horse and me back to the barn," he said.

"A kind of funny, but the cows come home on their own now," Greg said.

Make sure your smoke detector, extinguisher are on guard

Turn your dry-chemical fire extinguisher upside-down and give it a good shaking. Otherwise, even if the pressure's up and it's never been used, it could fail you in an emergency.

That occasional smoke-polymerized dry powder that can pack together and block the hose outlet, explains Larry Fryer, Extension safety engineer, with the U.K. College of Agriculture.

Check the dial, too, just in case the unit needs recharging. It must be recharged after every use, no matter how slight. Even if you didn't use it, somebody else might have fiddled with it.

"If the pin is pulled out, that's a sure sign that someone has used it or tampered with it," Fryer says.

Have the extinguisher serviced by fire-safety equipment specialists. They'll take the head off, take out the valves and clean them, put in fresh chemical, and repressurize it.

A high-quality extinguisher with a long head can be used and recharged after time for years, according to Fryer.

Your smoke detector should be serviced once a year by the same outfit. Even if you test it often and it always sounds a loud-and-clear alarm, batteries and bulbs often need to be replaced.

If you expect your early-warning and fire-fighting equipment to serve you well in case of fire, treat it right.

that pictures are the only thing, I hasten to add, to us on Tuesday any and all things that enable us to get the Mercury on the newstand early Wednesday afternoon.

I could know, with a lot less personal sacrifice, let the central plant at Cynthiana have from the postage and photographs, but then I'd lose that commodity called time. We'd still get it by July. Then after that I'm a little more human.

Well, this Tuesday, I try to catch up with all these loose ends I left dangling Monday evening, while the thought runs through my mind, why didn't I attend to them yesterday? But now I just put off 'til tomorrow' what I should have done the previous day.

Three pictures I'd taken of a young lady were developed and I was thankful that I'd taken that one last shot, proved it was the one usable.

Then from the continuous line across it was necessary to convert the photograph into a halftone using a 75-cent machine which produces 4.65 dots per square inch in my halftone is correct.

The result one can see somewhere in this weeks Mercury.

Pictures that I'd submitted Monday, but themselves to the photo-mechanical process (PMT for short) with roughly the same dot structure per square inch, but not always the same quality. But, I keep hanging in there with PMT in hope that someday, some way I'll lick the uncertainty. All the while space is fast becoming a costly commodity and I give me to waste space one week then have to run the same pictures the following week so that one may see what one would have seen the first time around. It's almost enough to make me wear off my mind, but they are faster and easier to work with and less costly, so therein lies the reason for hanging in there. I don't know before someone gets the idea

Defense of the Canal

(Editor's note: J. Patrick Conley, executive director of the Panama Canal Zone, a Carlisle native, and brother of Joe Frank Conley, left copies in Carlisle of the treatise and the proposed legislative bill to be submitted to Congress. He visited Carlisle recently on his way from Washington, D.C. where he had been working with a staff of other lawyers on the wording of the bill. These documents may be reviewed at the Carlisle Mercury office.)

by Anthony Harrigan

One of the principal arguments used by supporters of the Panama Canal treaties is that the United States would find itself embroiled in a guerrilla war if the canal and its zone aren't surrendered to Panama. The truth is that the tactical advantages are with the United States if it keeps the entire zone in American hands.

This point is made in a hard-hitting, first-hand report from Panama written by Egon Teasch, a writer who served with distinction as an Army officer in Vietnam and later taught at West Point. In a study report prepared for the United States Industrial Council, Teasch says:

"As long as the Zone is controlled by the U. S. five military men fear Panamanian guerrillas. Although large parts of Panama are jungle, the population is concentrated in the two major cities. Panama has never fought a war. The Guardia Nacional, which serves as both the army and the police of Panama, is 6,000 strong, but almost all of it is stationed in downtown Panama City, where it wears only the Guardia's dress like the jungle.

"If the American people are acquainted with these facts, they will realize that defense of the Canal against land attacks would be a simple matter. Nothing is more absurd than the notion that the Canal can be disabled by dropping a few large grenades in a place where a department store were being located."

"AND YOU, CONGRESSMAN—HOW DO YOU FEEL ABOUT THE CONGRESS BEING TELEVISED?"

The Teasch report continues: "Panamanians could be trained to fight—the U.S. Army has been trying to do this in jungle warfare schools in the Zone for years—but the probability, if war broke out, would be that Cubans would do all the fighting. This is true because the vast majority of Cubans are rallied with U. S. retention of military bases in the Zone."

"The analogy with Vietnam is valid, but not the way treaty supporters think it."

"The crippling difficulty faced by the U. S. military in Vietnam was that the progressive territory was present in that war. Fortifying towns or hilltops, though easy, pointed the 'martyr' remained a war of movement because the U. S. and Saigon forces had to maintain the offensive's locality in order to maintain political control. In situations where the American forces the few instances when they were in the area, the offensive's locality in the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese attacks were slaughter."

"The Canal Zone, on the other hand, is only about 90 miles long and ten miles wide. Perimeters can be estab-
