Transy people 'Black Beauty'

Two Transylvania University students, a professor, and a staff member have parts in the television production of "Black Beauty," currently on location in and around Lexington.

Ben Bealmer, a senior political science major from Fishersville and Charles D. Haller, associate professor of drama, have speaking parts in the movie. Bealmer plays a rider and Haller has the role of Dr. Perkins.

Local theatergoers will recognize Bealmer for his parts in several Transylvania University Theater productions, including "Play It Again, Sam" and "The Bald Soprano," and Haller, who is director of the theater here.

Appearing in non-speaking roles are sophomore drama major Barbara Enos of Lexington and Prof. Edward Curtis, a 1977 graduate who is employed as the University's alumni secretary.

Notice City Voters

I have served you for the past 24 years and would like the opportunity of serving you one more term. We have come a long way, made a lot of progress and have never been in the red. I try to serve you in a business type way working with federal funds, federal and state programs and any programs that are available to help us in any way.

I feel that I have the right people and ways to obtain certain grants and money that will mean progress for all of us. The CETA program is now paying several of our employees and I'm trying to get more in the near future.

Over the years and with help from our Bluegrass ADD our federal funds are now about $20,000 annually. We could have a police station on main street. We could have a better police dept., a better fire dept., and many more improvements but this takes a lot of money and you the citizens must do the paying by higher utility bills and they are too high now.

Good management, common sense and a little work can help us grow without extra costs on our citizens. Your vote will be appreciated.

Wrong fire extinguisher can make matters worse

A class ABC fire extinguisher is the best one to buy for home use. Put it in a handy place, think fast and act fast. You can put out almost any type of small fire with it.

It is a dry-chemical unit, effective against three classifications of fire, according to Larry Piercy, UK Extension Safety engineer.

"The 'Class A' fire involves ordinary burnables—paper, wood, cloth, and many plastics. 'Class B' includes flammable liquids, gases, and grease. 'Class C' involves electrical fires, which include appliances and wiring in the fire area, even if something else started the fire.

Piercy notes that it takes three things to have a fire: fuel, oxygen and heat. Your class ABC extinguisher literally smotheres the fire out of a fire.

"But remember that it is meant for first-aid only, to put out a small fire. If the fire is big, don't stay around to fight it," says Piercy. "Get out fast."

Using the wrong type of extinguisher on a fire can be either disastrous or ineffective, Piercy warns.

If you use a Class A (water under pressure) unit on a Class B fire, it will spread the flames. On a Class C fire, you would have danger of shock or electrocution. And a Class BC extinguisher won't put out a Class A fire.

The dry chemical in your ABC extinguisher has to come in contact with the fire source to be effective, Piercy adds. That means it might not do the complete put-out job on a fire in a stuffed chair or bedding. Your best bet here is to have a garden hose hooked up to a faucet, just in case.

Keep a big jar of baking soda handy in the kitchen. You can usually put out a small grease fire with it, advise your extinguisher for another possible emergency.

New Guard unit organized

FRANKFORT—Frankfort and the central Kentucky area will gain a major Army National Guard unit Jan. 1, with the addition of a hospital unit, according to Maj. Gen. Richard L. Frymire, Kentucky's adjutant general.

He said that Kentucky has been authorized to form the 200-member 47th Combat General Support Hospital which, when fully staffed, will bring more than $22,000 in federal funds into the community annually.

The unit, which will be commanded by a colonel, is authorized 17 doctors, including a dentist and 19 nurses and numerous medical technicians. Approximately 90 per cent of the positions require professional skills and training will be offered to those who are acceptable into the unit without the necessary skills.

Col. Billy G. Wellman, Kentucky Army Guard chief of staff, said, "We chose to locate this unit in Frankfort because of the medical growth within the community and the number of medical facilities in central Kentucky from which we can recruit."

"We've needed this type of unit for some time," he continued, "and we feel fortunate to get such a high priority unit."

Wellman emphasized that the unit will not only be a great asset to the Guard, but will also be able to render great assistance to the citizens of Kentucky during times of disaster. The Kentucky Army Guard has had no hospital units in the past.

Equipment for the hospital is expected to begin arriving soon, and members are already being accepted for the unit.
