The Land Bank

When the day is ended, most men can only say that they have earned a wage. But when a farmer's day is over, he knows he has built something for tomorrow... and beyond. It takes patience and hard work. And, often, borrowed capital to reach long term goals. That's where we can help you, just as we helped your father's generation and your grandfather's generation.

CONNER NAMED KENTUCKY CLIMATOLOGIST

Bowling Green — The National Weather Service has recognized Client Conner, a member of the Department of Geography and Geology at Western Kentucky University, as the official state climatologist for Kentucky. Kentucky had been without the services of a climatologist since 1975.

By accepting the cooperative role with the National Climatic Center, Westcott will serve academic and research needs and provide public service on climatological matters throughout the state.

Conner said he is now working to re-establish the climatic data base for Kentucky. Temperature, precipitation, and related data are available now and other data and tabulations are expected to be added.

Conner will act as the single point of contact for climatic data requests. He can be reached by telephone at area 502/745-4665, or by writing the Department of Geography and Biology at Western.

JENNY WILEY, EXAMPLE OF TRUE PIONEER SPIRIT

by Lynn Evans

In the mountains of eastern Kentucky there is a state resort park near Prestonsburg commemorating the heroism and endurance of a pioneer woman, Jenny Wiley.

On Oct. 7, 1789, an Indian chief's son was killed by Mathias Hoffman, and the Indians decided to take revenge on him and his family. They attacked a cabin on Walker's Creek thinking it was Harman's.

Just before the attack, Jenny Wiley was wading before the cabin's fire with her four children. Her brother and a neighbor at her side. Her husband was away at the time. The door burst open and four Indians ran into the room, scalping three of the children, the neighbor and Jenny's brother. Jenny, in late months of pregnancy, grabbed her youngest child and tried to fight off her attackers. Because of the intervention of a chief in the party, they spared her life and that of her infant. After searching the cabin, the Indians realized that it was not Harman's.

They dragged the 30-year-old Jenny and her child into the darkness to escape. The weight of the infant and of the unborn child caused Jenny to have great difficulty in keeping up. By the fourth day she was staggering, stumbling and lagging behind. This angered the Indians because they were losing time. One of them grabbed her 15-month-old child and crushed its skull against a tree.

They swam the tug Fork of the Big Sandy River with the river current pulling Jenny. They stopped at a rock ledge at when she heard the screams of a young white man being burned at the stake. The Indians then came for her because they desired another death. An old Cherokee interceded and bargained for her life so that she could become one of his wives. The next morning the old chief was to come for her. The Indians were going hunting that day, so they tied her to a tree with dried deer thong to keep her from running away.

Late in the day it began to rain, drenching her completely and loosening the bonds that held her. She struggled free and began running. At dawn she reached John's Creek. On the other side she could see men working.

She called for help. One of her former neighbors crossed the creek and brought her to the opposite bank to safety.

As she climbed up the slippery side of the creek, the old Cherokee chief and another Indian hunting party appeared at the place where she had stopped. He shouted in broken English, "Honor, white square honor!" In his own mind she belonged to him and had again not run away.

Jenny was in captivity for 11 months. She rested for awhile at Walker's Station before starting on the trip to join her husband.

They had the more children. Jenny Wiley died at the age of 71.

Caution advised in selecting home insulation

Robert F. Stephens Attorney General

Although it is still very warm outside and not too many minds are turned toward cold weather, the height of the insulating season is just around the corner. In the early part of autumn, many consumers will be shopping for insulation and they should be aware of the many types available. Consumers should also be concerned with the safety aspects of insulating their homes. The growing demand for high quality — low cost insulation has caused the production of some questionable materials.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission has issued a caution to consumers concerning the warnings manufacturers place on fiberglass and rock wool home insulation. These warnings state the paper vapor barriers are flammable and should not be left exposed when installed. If the paper vapor barriers are installed incorrectly and accidentally ignited, they could cause a fire.

Corrosion and flammability of another insulation material was the concern of the "Emergency Interim Consumer Product Safety Rule Act of 1978." Cellulose insulation will have to meet certain federal standards by this fall before it can be purchased by consumers.

Consumers with questions concerning the new Safety Standards are urged to call the Consumer Product Safety Commission's toll-free hotline at 1-800-368-2666.

-Tax Notice-

COMMISSIONER OF REVENUE
 DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE

August 4, 1978

Mr. Joseph J. Leary
 Attorney at Law
 Building
 206 St. Clair Street
 Frankfort, Kentucky 40601

Re: Christian Layton, et al. v. Rose Brady and Department of Revenue.
 Court of Appeals - Nos. 78-240 & 78-348

Dear Mr. Leary:

My letter confirms our earlier telephone conversation. As I told you by phone, I discussed with Mrs. Rose Brady, Nicholas County PIA, and my staff the proposal for settlement of the above case which presented to me at a meeting with you and various officials and citizens of Nicholas County last Monday, at that meeting a decision was made to accept a ten percent increase in the assessment of your clients for 1977 in return for dismissal of the case. We have considered the points made at the meeting on Monday and we feel that we cannot accept the proposal of your clients made for two reasons: First, a ten percent increase in value on the property of your clients for 1977 is not sufficient to equalize their assessments with those of other taxpayers in the county. Second, we do not feel that we can agree to dismiss this suit, which is already in the appellate court, if it seems likely that a similar class action will be filed in 1978.

I am very much aware of the serious financial problems of Nicholas County and would like to cooperate in helping the county. However, I must remind you that it was the actions of the taxpayers who filed suit in this case, and not Mrs. Brady or the Department of Revenue, which have delayed collection of 1977 property taxes in Nicholas County. Even though the department and Mrs. Brady did not get the relief sought in Judge Lair's order, we were planning to comply with that order and not appeal it, so that tax collections for 1977 would not be delayed. In fact, the emergency reassessment ordered by Judge Lair was nearly completed when your clients filed their appeal to the Court of Appeals. If your clients would withdraw their original appeal, the reassessment ordered by Judge Lair could be completed in a very short time if the appeal is withdrawn.

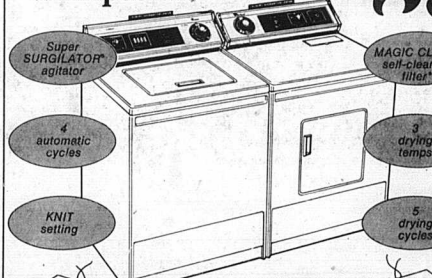

As I told everyone at the meeting on Monday, I am very concerned about future assessments in Nicholas County as well as the 1977 assessment. I believe that Mrs. Brady has made a very good case for the county and I believe that sales records from the county will show a value as required by our Constitution. In fact, the value of the present suit, which is already in the appellate court, will settle the legal problem in Nicholas County more quickly than starting a new suit in 1978.

Sincerely,
 Maurice P. Carpenter
 Commissioner of Revenue
