UK specialist suggests how best to use hay

An Extension forage specialist in the UK College of Agriculture has this suggestion for owners of beef cow-calf herds to utilize hay more efficiently. "Most hay quality to the nutritional needs of the different types of cattle is poor," says Gerry Laceyfield. The best quality hay should be fed to young calves, yearlings, bred heifers and cows producing milk. Poor quality hay to mature, dry, pregnant cows which have lower nutritional requirements. The most accurate way to determine hay quality is to have it tested by a laboratory. Sample different lots of hay separately, so that each can be fed and supplemented according to its quality indicated by chemical analysis. Sampling information and needed materials are available through county Extension agents for agriculture, who are located in every county in Kentucky. Mike Phillips is Nicholas County Extension Agent. Although not as reliable as a chemical test, a visual inspection and an estimate of quality are helpful in determining which animals should be fed each lot of hay. Mr. Laceyfield points out that the kind of hay, when it was cut and weather conditions during the hay-making season are important factors affecting hay quality. Legumes such as alfalfa and red clover, for example, generally contain more protein than grasses. Weather damage reduces quality. "High quality hay is early-cut, green, heavy, soft, free from foreign material and has a pleasant odor," says Mr. Laceyfield. Publications containing more information about hay quality are available at county Extension offices.

FRANKFORT — Despite hazardous road conditions because of Sunday night's heavy snow throughout the state most members of the 1978 General Assembly returned today from their home districts.

The Senate began its second week by adopting its second bill, a measure sponsored by Sen. William Sullivan (D-Henderson) and Sen. Richard Westenberg (D-Mayfield). By a unanimous vote of 36-0, the Senate passed Senate Bill (SB) 64, which exempts courts from furnishing statistics about criminals to the state Department of Justice.

"It takes the burden off the court clerk," said Sen. Sullivan. "Under existing law, the Department of Justice has the right to call on court clerks to furnish statistics on convictions. They have devised a form which includes many irrelevant details. If the clerk report completely, they have little time to conduct their regular business."

Under the provisions of SB 64, a system of reporting will be arranged between the local courts and the Department of Justice. The bill will be sent to the House for its consideration. In other action by the Senate today, a bill to remove the liquor license quota system and delete requirements for standard retail and wholesale liquor price markups was introduced by Sen. Tom Easterly (D-Frankfort). Sen. Easterly's bill, SB 62, is one of over 250 pieces of legislation introduced thus far in the 1978 General Assembly. Approximately one-third of the bills have been introduced in the Senate.

The Senate and House Cities Committees will conduct two joint meetings this week. One was held on Tuesday at the state's municipal code. Today at 10 a.m. in room 327 of the Capitol, the committee will discuss HB 74 regarding penalties for police and firemen.

The Senate's Business Organizations and Professions Committee cancelled its regular Tuesday meeting this week.
