Bill would establish new code for cities

FRANKFORT — A 166-page bill that would establish a new code for cities has as its core the granting of general powers to cities "not in conflict with a constitutional provision or statute".

This power is granted in one section, while another 144 sections spell out the specific restrictions.

Since the pre-filed Bill is the result of more than 200 hours of work by a municipal statutes revision commission, it was members of this body who today reviewed the bill for a joint meeting of the House and Senate cities committees.

Jane McGinnis, a member of the Legislative Research Commission staff who worked with the Revision Commission, reviewed generally the issues covered in the bill. She said sections 1 through 16 deal with organization and dissolution of a city, 17 covers general powers, and next comes the issue of public ways.

Establishing a board of claims under the State Board of Claims for damage actions against cities is covered in sections 21-23 with the following sections, up to 40, dealing with organization of cities, under mayor-council, commission and city manager forms of government.

City administrative agencies are covered under sections 41-54. Sections 55-90 deal with city finance and for the first time would require all cities to operate under a budget and have an annual audit.

Other sections cover bonding, special assessments, and set up a study committee for possible merger in Louisville-Jefferson County.

Sen. Mike Moloney (D-Lexington) questioned the general powers section in light of a recent state Supreme Court ruling with regard to county home rule.

George Rabe, attorney with the revision commission and former Lexington city attorney, cited court decisions which had upheld cities' powers.

Sen. Moloney also asked if section 21 limits municipalities' liability. Mr. Rabe said the section places cities in the same position as the state with the exception of police officers. That is, damage claims against cities would have to come before the cities' board of claims.

Former Metro Mayor Foster Pettit (Lexington-Fayette Co.) commented "It does not turn cities loose to do what they please. The legislature remains the governing power with the right to place any restrictions on cities."

Mr. Pettit also noted the bill is not designed to become effective until 1980 allowing adequate time for legislative changes before its implementation.

But all commissioners members are not that happy with the finished product. M. C. Miller served on the commission as a citizen representative and spoke to the committees assembly both in this capacity and as a representative of the Association of Professional Fire-Fighters.

"John Q. Citizen is not adequately represented in this bill and public employees cannot exist with cities having all this power," Mr. Miller says.

He voiced concerns over section 61, a section dealing with levying license taxes on businesses, calling it a "new sales tax" but by a different name and informed the committees that provisions in the act that would allow for police and fire mergers have been fought by his association throughout the United States.

He also challenged section 125 which restricts political activity and section 131 which deals with suspension of police and fire fighters.

WHAT'S A 'GRAPEFRUIT'?

Why is a grapefruit a "grapefruit"? In 1814 horticulturist John Lunan first called a variety of the Jamaican pummelo a "grapefruit" because he thought this fruit had a "resemblance in flavor to the grape". Such a similarity, however, is hard to imagine today.

About ten years later another horticulturist again called it a "grapefruit" because grapefruit is borne in bunches like grapes on large trees. The name caught on, and so did the use of this citrus delight.

Grapefruit offers year-round eating enjoyment. But since it's in plentiful supply throughout January, now's a good time to give your family a taste treat, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture (USDA).

Grapefruit sections or halves are always a welcome addition to the breakfast table. But for added mealtime enjoyment, why not make chilled grapefruit sections part of a fresh fruit platter or salad? Try sections combined with mandarin oranges or avocado.

When you buy grapefruit, you know it's ready to eat. State laws set the maturity level at which grapefruit can be picked and shipped out of state. Maturity, judged on the basis of juice, sugar and acid content, indicates that the fruit is ready to eat.

Once picked, grapefruit will not ripen further, so these state laws on maturity are the consumer's assurance that all citrus in the market is ready to eat. Grapefruit is often "stored" on the tree after it matures. When this is done, the fruit becomes sweeter.

Firm well-shaped fruit that is heavy for its size is usually the best for eating. Thin-skinned fruit usually has more juice than coarse-skinned grapefruit. Rough, ridged or wrinkled skin can also be a sign of thick skin, pulpiness and lack of juice.

Grapefruit often has skin defects such as scales, scars, thorn scratches or discoloration, but these don't usually affect the eating quality of the fruit.

Avoid fruit that is soft or that has discolored areas on the peel at the stem end. Also avoid grapefruit with water soaked areas, loss of bright color and a soft peel that breaks easily with finger pressure. These are all symptoms of decay and will probably affect the flavor.

At the produce counter, you're the best judge of overall freshness and quality. And remember, fresh fruit is perishable, so buy only as much as you need.

Parson Jones

A meditation expert from India came to our little town the other to teach people how to get the most out of life. Abdu Crosslegs is a world-renowned authority on the subject as I'm sure you already know. So, I enrolled in his class. It cost $360 -- a rich experience for a preacher.

In a short time my mind was sailing through space and coming to rest in the strangest places. I saw in my mind's eye a bird church. As the senior chirping choir sang "Fly Away," I tiptoed into the church and perched myself on the back seat. I was astounded at how much these birds reminded me of the human church.

There was Mocking Bird in the choir. Then there was Pastor Penguin shifting from side to side in the pulpit. How I was sitting next to me whispering loudly, that the lights were too bright and hurt his eyes. Four pews up two catbirds were busy gossiping about the other members of the flock.

Kingfishers were in the front pews and the English Sparrows were standing at the rear.

Pastor Penguin preached a sermon entitled, "God's eye is on the Sparrow," taken from the words of Jesus. In the rear the sparrows were all bowed in prayer with a smile on their faces.

During the sermon, the offering was received by the bluejays and the rest was over. And with that my mind returned to its original location.

Now, some people say this meditation stuff is for the birds, but it's my opinion that humans can benefit from it.
