Local county officials must balance checkbook

(This is the third in a six-part series describing changes in county government and emphasizing the new Administrative Code as one of the major tools for change. The code will detail a county's business procedures for services, finance, personnel and purchasing.)

Who pays the bills and balances the checkbook at your house? Usually the answer is: the same person. If there's a mistake in the balance or a bill is forgotten, it's clear who's responsible. On the other hand, a classic problem that often occurs in household management is the practice of two parties writing checks on the same account but neglecting to keep an up-to-date central record. If a check bounces then who's responsible?

The point remains the same. Good financial management requires a clear fixing of responsibility.

During our first 150 years, Kentucky counties had a checkered history of financial management. The 1850 Constitution had to address the problem of so-called "pauper" counties that were more in state revenues than they were returning.

The 1891 Constitution contains provisions for control of debt that were reactions to slipshod practices in county support of turnpike and railroad ventures.

The Depression years created other problems leading to state concern about its legal and financial capacity to protect the state's credit in relation to local bond defaults.

As a result, county budgets and expenditures have been governed by the County Budget Act (1934) and the County Debt Act (1938), both under the supervision of the State Local Finance Officer for many years now. These state laws spell out the "checks and balances" used and the county officials to be involved in a system of checks and balances aimed at maintaining the financial integrity of the county.

The legislature has now made some significant changes in this system. First, it passed the Judge/Executive Act in the 1976 Special Session. This act recognized that giving the judge executive or administrative responsibility would be inappropriate without also giving him substantial fiscal authority. So, the law says that the judge/executive shall: Require county officials handling county money to make financial reports; Prepare, under KRS Chapter 68, the annual budget and administer it when passed; keep fiscal court advised as to the county's financial condition and needs of the county and make reports thereon.

A 1978 law which established the provisions of the administrative code also makes additional changes in financial procedures which become effective in January 1979. The net effect of these changes is to consolidate fiscal responsibility in the office of the judge/executive.

These procedural revisions in the system of financial responsibility and accountability make the financial section of the administrative code a very important record of what is to be expected of any agency or official receiving county funds or having a claim against the county.

If a fiscal court chooses to go ahead and adopt its code before January 1979, several immediate decisions about financial management can be made. Now, the judge and the court can establish the policy regarding record keeping for county budget appropriations to other county officials and independent agencies.

A county can actually transfer money in a lump sum to the office or agency. Or, it can require the office or agency to present claims for payment.

This latter method would meet the legal requirements for claims presented to the judge, for most agencies and offices using county money. All of the necessary accounting records would remain in the county system.

The judge/executive also assumes responsibility from the county clerk for the quarterly report of budget expenditures required by the State-Local Finance Officer. The administrative code could set the policies for these requests. Fiscal court could receive the report and/or simultaneously receive the same meeting or it could be submitted and held for approval at the next regular meeting.

Amendments can result from receiving new revenues for first appropriations or from reducing the budget in a given account. The code would make different provisions for each situation.

The county treasurer, who is appointed by and serves at the pleasure of the fiscal court, is an important part of fiscal checks and balances in county government. As the custodian and disbursing officer of county funds, the county treasurer is required by law to maintain a separate record of receipts, appropriations, expenditures and the balance of each budget fund. The treasurer's records should be maintained separately as an independent check of the county's receipts and expenditures for the fiscal court.

Accidents reported

The Nicholas County Sheriff Department reported several accidents in the County during the last week.

While driving north on Concord Road Howard Richardson of Winchester totaled a 2-ton International Truck belonging to Hawkins Brothers of Clay City after driving off the shoulder of the road and losing control of the truck which was transporting logs. Damages were extensive. No injuries were reported.

Deputy Ralph Brookshire investigated an accident that occurred July 4 on the Stoney Creek Road where the car driven by Stanley Morris of Route 4, Carlisle, allegedly sideswiped the 1970 Chevrolet of Mary H. Banks, Route 4 Vine Grove. Both cars received damages.

An unidentified car travelling south on Gallows Hill Road allegedly ran Marion Brown Jr. of Catherine Street off the road damaging the right front fender and back left fender of his 1975 Ford Wednesday, July 5. There were no injuries reported.

Commandments to be posted

FRANKFORT — The law requiring that a copy of the Ten Commandments be displayed in Kentucky classrooms will be implemented as soon as funds become available according to a Department of Education official.

House Bill 156, passed during the 1978 General Assembly, says, "It shall be the duty of the superintendent to see that instruction, provided sufficient funds are available...to ensure that a durable, permanent copy of the Ten Commandments shall be displayed in a well in each public elementary and secondary school classroom in the Commonwealth."

The act also provides that the copies will be 16 inches wide by 20 inches high and that they "shall be purchased with funds made available through voluntary contributions made to the state treasurer for the purposes of this Act."

Dr. James B. Graham, superintendent of public instruction, has appointed Shirley P. Williamson, head of the Office of Communication Services, to oversee implementation of the act. Communications will be responsible for all printing operations and publications of the Department of Education.

Mr. Williamson said, "The department has no problem with implementing the law as soon as funds become available." She said that thus far only $11 has been donated to pay printing costs.

An attorney general's opinion has been requested to determine what is "durable" and "permanent" and also to determine whether an outside group can have the copies printed, with distribution by the education department, or whether the department must have the copies printed. If the department arranges for printing, bids must be taken as with most state contracts.

The state department for finance and administration is currently determining a "ballpark figure" for the cost of printing enough copies for about 31,000 elementary classrooms in Ky., Mr. Williamson said.
