SCS hearings set on RAMR

LEXINGTON — Plans and procedures for reclaiming some 101,000 acres of abandoned strip mining sites in Kentucky will be aired publicly, a U. S. Soil Conservation Service (SCS) spokesman has announced.

Written or oral comments (limited to ten minutes) on how the new rural abandoned mine reclamation (RAMR) program should be implemented will be taken in Hazard at the Hazard Community College on March 8, according to Glen E. Murray, SCS state conservationist. The public hearings will run between 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and from 7:30 p.m. to 10 p.m.

"We are not intending that these meetings turn into a debate over the merits of P.L. 95-87, the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977," Mr. Murray pointed out. "Instead, we are hoping that private citizens, landowners and environmental organizations will give us their opinions on how the RAMR program should be conducted across the nation and in Kentucky."

Carter advisor to speak at UK

One of President Carter's top White House advisors will participate in a colloquium, "Executive Reorganization: Fact or Fantasy?", at the University of Kentucky tomorrow (March 3).

Stuart Eizenstat, special assistant to the President for domestic affairs, will be one of four participants discussing possibilities of reorganizing the executive branch of the federal government.

The colloquium, sponsored by the UK Department of Political Science and the UK Master of Public Administration Program, will be from 3-5 p.m. in the UK Student Center Theatre. It is free and open to the public.

Mr. Eizenstat is President Carter's chief advisor for domestic affairs and policy and served the President as issues coordinator during the 1976 campaign. He also served Hubert Humphrey as an aide and speech writer during Mr. Humphrey's term as vice president.

Also participating in the colloquium will be Dr. Louis Fisher of the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress, and Dr. Lester Salamon of the Reorganization Planning Team of the Office of Management and Budget.

Dr. John Wanat of the UK Department of Political Science will moderate the program.

Dr. Fisher is American national government specialist for the Congressional Research Service and has written several highly-acclaimed books and articles dealing with Congress and the Presidency.

Dr. Salamon is a noted scholar in the fields of U. S. political institutions, political processes and behavior and intergovernmental relations.

Republicans to launch state reorganization effort

The Republican Party of Kentucky is launching a statewide effort to recruit "Volunteers for Victory".

That is the theme and purpose of the Grand Old Party's bottom-to-top reorganization effort March 11-April 8.

During the process, party leaders at precinct, county, congressional district and statewide levels will be elected to serve for two years.

State Party Chairman Lee R. Nunn issued the following statement regarding the reorganization effort:

"Kentucky and the nation are turning away from the present Democrat officeholders in disgust and disappointment. The issues and the public mood are running in favor of our Republican approach to government. What we must do during the reorganization process is to seek out and enlist the volunteer workers who will carry our Republican candidates to victory in 1978, 1979 and beyond.

"We welcome and urge all Republicans to volunteer their services as a precinct, county, district or state officer in the Party. By rule and by principle, our Party is open to all who are willing to become involved."

Frankfort Facts

by Sen. Ed Ford

FRANKFORT — The past week in the Senate was dominated by three issues that caused much long and heated debate. The repeal of the Equal Rights Amendment, the "Bottle Bill" and collective bargaining for school teachers.

These three issues account for about 70 per cent of the mail I receive in regards to issues before the General Assembly.

State Senator Ed Ford has arranged a meeting of the Department of Human Resources and operators of Family Care Homes in this area. Friday, March 3, Sen. Ford and representatives of the Department will be at the Kentucky Utility Office on West Pike Street in Cynthiana at 2:30 p.m. for a public hearing. Senator Ford said "I have had many questions concerning problems being experienced by Family Care, or "Mini-Home" operators that I'm not able to answer. I believe this is the best way to solve any problems that might exist."

Senator Ford urges all operators in the area to attend even if they feel they don't have problems. He feels this type meeting or workshop can be advantageous to all interested parties.

A resolution that calls for the rescinding of the Equal Rights Amendment that was passed in a special session in 1972 was filed in January. This resolution has been held in committee which refuses to report it out. A petition was filed to force a vote on the floor as to whether the committee had held the bill "beyond a reasonable length of time". By the rules of the Senate a constitutional majority of the members, 20, must agree. After almost two hours of debate the vote was taken with 19 members voting to take the resolution from the committee. This was one vote short. One Senator who had previously indicated that he would vote to recind was absent. Another attempt was made Friday with all members present but once again the count was 19. One Senator switched his vote. This should be the death of this issue.

The same strategy was used to attempt to bring the bottle bill out of committee. After less lengthy debate this measure was defeated also. As I have mentioned before, I am a co-sponsor of the bottle bill.

Senate Bill 88, the collective bargaining bill for teachers was before us Wednesday and Friday. On Wednesday, I joined forces with Senators Ken Gibson, D-Madisonville and Senator Joe Wright, D-Harned and we succeeded in delaying the vote until Friday to give us an opportunity to draw amendments to the bill. We are all members of the Education Committee and even though this bill is directly related to education it was never assigned to our committee. On Friday, we were able to get two of the six amendments we proposed adopted. However, the amendment that I considered most important was rejected. This amendment required that an appropriation of some 1.7 million dollars be added to be distributed to the local boards of education to help defray the cost of negotiations. I pointed out that if the appropriation was not made, money that is now being spent to educate children will have to be spent to employ professional negotiators in the future. The proponents of the bill said this was an attempt to kill the bill. We debated the issue for two hours and the bill was passed without the amendment. I oppose collective bargaining for teachers in any form but believe it is totally irresponsible to require local boards to do something and not fund the program. The vote indicated the majority of the Senate did not agree with me. Our only hope of defeating this bad piece of legislation is in the House.

We have this week and then only two more weeks before the session ends. There are still many important bills to consider. After the session, I plan to be in Nicholas County to visit and discuss what has happened during the General Assembly.

Accident correction

Regarding a city accident report we made in last week's MERCURY, we incorrectly stated that Michael Edward Mattox of 408 Second Street stopped at stop sign and then pulled out in front of William E. Townsend, Route 4, Cynthiana.

According to the accident report (partially pictured) and policeman Lamar Mann, Mr. Townsend stopped at the stop sign on Sharon Way and didn't see Mr. Mattox and pulled out in front of Mr. Mattox. Mr. Mattox was struck on the left side and pushed into a ditch.

We apologize for this error.

Harry Galbraith speaker at Rotary

Harry Galbraith was the guest speaker at the weekly meeting of the Carlisle Rotary Club, Thursday, Feb. 22.

Mr. Galbraith delivered an interesting and enlightening talk on the Blue Licks Spring and some of the associated battles and events that have occurred in that area over the past 200 years. He explained how Tom Hunter found skeletons of the Mastadons, buried 20 feet deep, while searching for the springs after the springs had dried up. The mystery still remains as to what happened to the disappearance of the Blue Lick Springs, he said.

4-H Records tell the 4-H Story

Often when working with 4-H, one begins to think about all the things youngsters can learn and enjoy. However, it is often questionable if the youngster realizes the learnings they experience. During our recent county records judging, several youngsters expressed their feelings toward their 4-H work.

Michelle Knapke, a 4-H member for the past six years, recently won the 4-H Achievement award in the Foods Project. Michelle says, "...I joined 4-H mainly to have fun, but I have found out over the years, that it is fun — and it is also a great learning experience when one becomes involved. I have been in the 4-H Foods Project six years, and every year I am surprised to learn something new. It's not that I think I know everything, but the things I find out are things that I really should have known...I sincerely think 4-H has helped me gain confidence in myself. Working with foods gives me a sense of pride and confidence, especially when something I've made receives a compliment. It's a wonderful feeling to know something I did made somebody happy. Being in 4-H has helped me get to know other people and learn to perform and talk in front of others. This will probably be the most important thing I have gained from 4-H, and I hope it stays with me always."

Robbyn Carter, a 4-H member of two years expressed some of her views about her newly found 4-H experiences. "...I went to 4-H camp. I enjoy camp very much. This was my first experience at staying away from my family at night. I got a little homesick, but I'm glad I stayed. At camp this past year, I learned more about 4-H. I also enjoyed the folk games and learned more about swimming. I love the water. We get to make new friends, take part in crafts and sports and our camping experience. The things I like best about 4-H are that I can learn to do new, useful things by doing them and we can have fun times together."

Margaret Hamm, Junior Area Champion in the Foods Project told about her learning this year. Margaret says, "This year I learned that a nutritious breakfast would enable me to perform my daily tasks well. In studying the four food groups, I understand the kinds of food which make a nutritious breakfast, and have been more conscious of nutrition when selecting my breakfast foods...This project has meant much to me. I am now gathering the skills that will help me to someday soon be able to prepare a complete meal for my family. This project has meant a lot of hard work, but it has been fun."

Even during misfortunate experiences, 4-H members have expressed learnings. For example, Kay Conley of the Guess What's Teen Club expressed on her Older Youth Conference application, "4-H has also given me courage enough to perform on tv, and remain calm, while a fly lands on my nose in the middle of a serious speech." And — that is what courage is, Kay also said. To sum things up, 4-H has given me the courage to participate and learn new things."

And that's what it's all about. Even though it is not often realized, we are all learning things through daily experience.

Let's all realize that what is done for youth is truly recognized. Therefore, adults can realize that each hour spent in helping a young person develop new skills — is also an hour he/she can grow by sharing the enthusiasm expressed through the accomplishment.

The fly that landed on Kay Conley's nose vanished in an instant — and she continued her speech with renewed enthusiasm. However, we often let a fly land on our nose through hesitation to help with youth — and it stays there while we grumble and complain about the system or the problems of today's youth. What have you shared with a youth this week? We have many opportunities for you to "swat your flys" by serving as a 4-H leader. Just call 289-2312 and say, "I want to be a 4-H leader".

Gout is form of arthritis

"Although it is a metabolic defect, not diet, which causes gout, certain foods and beverages can precipitate attacks," reports James E. Letcher, Executive Director of the Kentucky Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation.

Gout is one of nearly 100 different forms of arthritis, and the only one which can be affected by special foods. Once mistakenly believed to be a disease brought on by over eating and drinking, gout has been shown to be caused by an imbalance of uric acid in the body. Excess uric acid forms needle-like crystals in one or more joints which cause inflammation and excruciating pain.

"Gout sufferers can now have their disease firmly controlled by a new medication, called allopurinol, and the avoidance of certain foods," said Mr. Letcher. Allopurinol reduces the production of uric acid in the body. Physicians also warn gout victims against heavy consumption of foods which contain purines, substances that are converted into uric acid during digestion. These include alcoholic beverages, anchovies, sardines, liver and kidneys.

Mr. Letcher noted that those interested in learning more about gout can write for a free leaflet from the Kentucky Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation at 1381 Bardstown Road, Louisville 40202.

Majority sympathize with farmers' plight

(Editor's note: The following was written by pollster Louis Harris and appeared in the Savannah Morning News, Jan. 30, 1978.)

By 80-13 per cent, an overwhelming majority of Americans is in sympathy with the farmers who have taken to their tractors to protest falling farm incomes.

Moreover, by five to one the public supports the basic demand of the farmers, which is to raise the prices of the crops they sell so that they would be based on 100 per cent of parity. This would guarantee them a profit and enable them to make ends meet.

Of course, the acid test of such public backing is whether consumers would be willing to pay higher food prices to relieve the plight of the farmer. Over the past few years, Harris Surveys have consistently shown that, along with energy and health, more than eight of every ten Americans attribute their rising cost of living to the high cost of food. Indeed, in this latest survey of 1,259 adults nationwide, when asked how worried they would be about their own food costs rising rapidly if farm prices were allowed to go up sharply, 35 per cent said they were "greatly worried" and another 47 per cent were "moderately worried".

Despite this, the public feels so strongly about the plight of the farmer that a 54-36 per cent majority would be willing to have food prices rise by five per cent in order to give farmers their parity goals. To be sure, when people were asked if they would be willing to see their food costs go up ten per cent, a 68-19 per cent majority then said they would oppose the farmers' position.

But accepting a five per cent rise in food costs is not insignificant. There are very few occasions these days when Americans express a willingness to pay more for any product or service.

Part of the reason for this deeply felt sympathy for the farmers can be traced to the fact that most people do not blame farmers for high food prices. By a lopsided 87-4 per cent, a majority continues to agree with the charges of farm protest leaders that "food middlemen rather than the farmers are the ones who make most of the profits in food".

In many ways, these latest results are an unusual testimony to the fact that people do not behave strictly according to their own economic self-interest. Farmers are now less than four per cent of the population. More than three out of every four Americans live in an essentially urban setting. Yet it is apparent that most people do not view the question as a simple matter of producer vs. consumer interests.

This becomes clear in a more detailed analysis of the pivotal question dealing with people's willingness to see their food prices rise by five per cent in order to give farmers 100 per cent of parity in prices, a level that will insure them a profit on their products:

— Among people who live in big cities, a 48-37 per cent majority favors parity, even if it means a five per cent rise in their own food costs. To be sure, rural residents support the move by a higher 60-33 per cent. But the key fact is that in the big cities, the issue has not been cast as consumers against farm producers.

— Among union members, a high 59-33 per cent majority would be willing to pay five per cent more in food costs to give farmers their price goals. It is evident that union labor is capable of identifying with the plight of farmers, despite the long history of farm and labor union organizations being at loggerheads on most issues in Congress.

— The most affluent and educated groups are also most supportive of the protesting farmers' movement. Among the college educated, a 57-34 per cent majority is willing to pay five per cent more for food costs, as is an even higher 63-29 per cent majority of professionals. Among those with incomes of $25,000 and over, willingness to pay more to see parity given to the farmers reaches a high-water mark of 63-33 per cent.

It is evident that the plight of farmers has become a matter of conscience to millions of Americans. And their depth of conviction is such that they are willing to affect their own economic status to see what they feel is justice done for farmers.

Can you help?

Eric Dryden, 12, son of Harold and Shirley Dryden of Locust Street in Carlisle, was injured Aug. 17 when a bicycle he was riding on Main Street swerved and was struck by a car.

The seventh-grade Nicholas County Elementary student was so badly injured that for a time it was feared he would not survive. He was hospitalized at the University Medical Center in Lexington for four months, and was then moved to Cardinal Hill in Lexington. His parents brought him home for Christmas and so far, have been able to take care of him at their home, even though someone must be with him at all times. He has been in a coma since the accident.

Bills at the UK hospital alone reached $25,000, not counting physicians' and surgeons' fees, according to Rev. Eugene White, their minister. Most of these expenses have been paid by insurance.

However, Eric's short stay at Cardinal Hill cost $2,834. This amount and other related expenses has not been paid as yet. Also, the almost $2,500 doctor bills at the Medical Center remain unpaid.

Rev. White, pastor of the Carlisle Christian Church, said the Drydens have sold their cattle from the farm in an effort to meet the bills. To make matters worse, Eric's older brother Dudley was injured in a freak auto accident in December. He has now recovered fully from his injuries.

Mr. Dryden is a farmer and a park ranger at Blue Lick Battlefield State Park. Mrs. Dryden manages Green Valley Apartments here in Carlisle. They take turns caring for Eric 24 hours a day.

A benefit fund has been established at the State National Bank, Maysville, to help the family meet these overwhelming expenses.

Anyone who wishes to contribute to the fund should take or mail a donation (large or small) to Rev. Eugene White, Carlisle Christian Church, Carlisle, Ky. 40311, or to the State National Bank, Maysville, Ky. 41056.

Peel-off labels speed tax returns

To help speed up the processing of tax return and receive a refund faster, taxpayers should use the pre-addressed, peel-off label on their returns, according to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS).

The label, which appears on the cover of the tax package mailed to taxpayers, lists name, address, and social security number. If any of this information is incorrect, the taxpayer should make corrections right on the label.

Married taxpayers filing a joint return should insure that two social security numbers appear on the label. If only one number is shown, the other spouse's number should be entered on the appropriate line.

Taxpayers can also insure a faster refund by mailing their return in the coded envelope also included with the tax package and making sure they have attached all W-2 forms and required schedules and forms, the IRS said.
