UK beef research conference

A beef cattle research conference will be held in the E. S. Good Barn on the University of Kentucky campus Oct. 6. Registration for the event will begin at 9 a.m. with the program getting underway at 9:30.

Research completed or in progress with beef cattle by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station will be covered. This includes nine presentations from the speakers' podium and seventeen detailed research reports in a publication that will be available at the conference.

"With the emphasis on reporting research results, there will be little time devoted to recommendations for immediate use by cattle producers," says Curtis Absher, Extension beef cattle specialist in the UK College of Agriculture.

For this reason, he expects the conference to be attended mainly by Extension workers, veterinarians and agribusiness people dealing in feed, supplies and farm credit. However, the conference is open to anyone interested in keeping up to date on results from beef cattle research in Kentucky.

Research reports will cover various phases of beef cattle production, including nutrition, management, use of feed additives, and systems of finishing cattle.

Among the speakers are Virgil Haya, chairman of the UK Department of Animal Sciences, and W. H. Hale, Department of Animal Sciences at the University of Arizona. Haya will discuss the overall beef cattle program of the UK College of Agriculture. Hale will discuss beef research needs.
