New food stamp rules to limit participants

Regulations drawn to implement a provision of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 will limit retail stores participating in the food stamp program to those whose sales consist primarily of staple foods, according to Edward W. Davidson, southeast regional director of the food stamp program.

Davidson said the new regulations specify that over 50 per cent of a participating retailer's or wholesaler's food sales must be in staple foods intended for home preparation such as fresh meat, poultry, fish, vegetables, fruits and dairy products. The regulations prohibit the sale of hot foods ready for immediate consumption in exchange for food stamps. These requirements are now mandated by law.

Other changes announced include a provision under which retailers found guilty of selling nonfood items in exchange for food stamps, or of exchanging food stamps for cash may be fined up to $5,000 per violation where disqualification of the store would cause hardship for local food stamp recipients.

In accordance with last year's law, the new regulations also require food stores to give cash instead of credit slips as change for amounts less than $1 in food stamp transactions.

"These regulations," said Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carol Tucker Foreman, "are part of a larger body of final rules to be issued that will

Ring man

The characters get stranger and stranger each year at Mt. Sterling's Court Day. The Ring Man shown here is not talking much, but then it might be hard to understand him since he's got his teeth in his pocket — and a ring through his nose. — Photo by Jean Ann Kerr.

'Music Man' coming to Opera House

One of the most popular musical shows in American stage history, Meredith Willson's The Music Man, is being brought to the stage of the Lexington Opera House on Nov. 2, 3 and 4 by the Lexington Musical Theatre company. This is the full-filled tale of a brassy, saucy loveable rogue who comes to a little Iowa town in the 1910s to fleece its citizens with an original gold-brick scheme.

When The Music Man comes to the Opera House, there can't be 78 trumpets in the orchestra nor the 110 cornets which are so rousingly sung about in the famous "Seventy-six Trombones" number, but Lexington Musical Theatre always provides an exciting orchestra and beautiful voices when they appear on any stage. One of the many numbers that invariably stop the show is "Ya Got Trouble" with which the swindling hero fast-talks his victims into falling in with his scheme right after his arrival in town. This talking-song is a guttural spiel that will set up a nostalgic quiver in anyone old enough to remember 1913 days.

A talented cast will bring this musical show to the Opera House with curtain at 8 p.m. Book, music and lyrics are by Meredith Willson, with story by Meredith Willson and Franklin Levy. Robert Boston is directing and W. Harry Clarke is music director.

Tickets at $7.50 for orchestra and first balcony levels, $4.50 for second balcony, may be ordered by mail addressed to Lexington Musical Theatre, 423 Kingsway Drive, Lexington, KY 40502. Thursday night, Nov. 2, is family night and tickets for children under 12 are $5.00 on orchestra and first balcony levels when accompanied by an adult.

Fiscal courts not obligated to provide sheriff with funds

Fiscal courts are not mandated to provide funds for the sheriff to provide any specific or minimum level of police protection for his county, according to an opinion from the state Attorney General's Office.

Charles Runyan, assistant deputy attorney general, wrote in the opinion:

requested by U. S. Rep. Carl Perkins of Kentucky that the fiscal court has a legal responsibility to fund the cost of certain equipment and supplies of the sheriff's office either through the sheriff's excess fees or the county treasury that to statutory treatment.

Runyan said this also applies to sheriff's deputies' salaries, although, according to the Attorney General's office, no statutes mandate the fiscal court to fund sheriff's operations beyond the level.

Runyan stated the fiscal court has the authority to determine the number of sheriff's deputies but that there is no statute requiring the court to "establish any specific minimum number or other number of sheriff deputy positions regardless of the public necessity for law enforcement purposes.

Runyan said if the sheriff's office is to be used as a most effective tool of local law enforcement in rural Kentucky, the sheriff's office will have to be augmented by the establishment of sufficient, full-time deputies to do the job. He also stated that such a program would require new state legislation mandating the responsibility of fiscal court to provide at least a minimal deputy staff for law enforcement purposes.

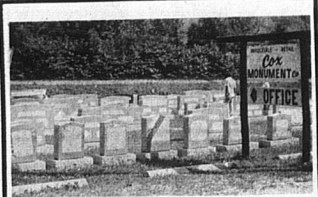

The opinion was issued in response to Rep. Perkins concern that many rural areas in Kentucky were lacking adequate police protection as in many areas, the sheriff's office provides the exclusive means for that protection.

According to Perkins, if the fiscal court does not provide the sheriff with funds for deputies to be used in a police capacity, the people will suffer.
