Are day-care days here?

Does Carlisle need a day-care center? If one were to ask Mrs. Phil Weaver, she might hesitate before answering. Mrs. Weaver plans to go wholeheartedly into managing a day-care center in 1979. It happens because parent interest was lacking. The popularity of day-care centers has increased immensely since 1974. Today, day-centers, profit and non-profit, have sprung up all around the country. It's a booming business. There is little wonder they are so popular. If one were to peek into one of these "mass baby-sitting projects" in progress, he'd probably want to stay. Youngsters, six months to five years, painting, fishing, riding the zoo, riding ponies, having birthday parties, all of these things he would see. The day-care centers are actually a place where a child can get a head start in his education and social adaptation.

Day-care centers are regulated through the Department of Human Resources. They must have had a license issued that the children are being safely taken care of through various regulations. Inspections, adequate space (36 sq. feet per child), sufficient staff (one staff member for every six children), individual bedding, and a closed-in yard are among the modern-day list of regulations that day-care centers must be profit or non-profit. If one also, it receives aid from the

Coal operator's candidacy may confuse racing

By S. C. Van Curen
FRANKFORT — Injection of the name of an Eastern Kentucky coal operator's name into the field of potential candidates for the Democratic nomination for governor next year just adds more confusion to the already cluttered arena.

At a meeting with friends of Carroll Hubbard in Madisonville last week, Paul Patton said he may become a candidate if Hubbard doesn't. Patton said if Hubbard runs that he (Patton) will support Hubbard. He turned the situation around and said if Hubbard doesn't run that Hubbard will support him. Patton also indicated that there is the possibility that Hubbard could become his campaign manager.

Hubbard has not taken his name out of the hat yet, but it seems apparent that the Hubbard faction of the party

Letters

To The Carlisle Mercury: I was so moved by Mrs. Joan Noll's letter in last week's Mercury concerning the Home Economics Department's plan to discontinue the class of a Day Care Center in Nicholas County.

First, I would like to say that this class is very educational and well worth one's while. I had the opportunity to work in the preparation of the class and in the class itself. With the help of these two class instructors, helping students, money, effort, and a supporting community, a Day Care Center should be a success.

As for this Day Care Center for Nicholas County, this would be a good investment. It would be a big help to many parents in Nicholas County. A center would be worth the money, time and effort. Mrs. Martha Sue Taylor and Mrs. Bonnie McCallie have put a great deal of work in the preparation of the class and in the class itself. With the help of these two class instructors, helping students, money, effort, and a supporting community, a Day Care Center should be a success.

To The Carlisle Mercury: We would like to express our appreciation to you for running the newspaper articles and the ad for Adult Education. We attribute our success each year to the cooperation of people like you who are interested in the welfare of the community.

Sincerely,

Kentucky Reflections

Candidates for governor leaving woodwork earlier

It is unusual for Kentucky gubernatorial candidates to begin their campaigns for the November general election. As a rule, political aspirants do not start active campaigning so far ahead of time. With several candidates already campaigning, Rep. Carroll Hubbard is still coyly talking about making a run for office. Patton indicated that he won't make a questionnaire to each home and district. The governor has strongly indicated that he will support Terry McCreary, former commerce commissioner, as his successor. They are long-time friends from their days in the State House of Representatives. McCreary hasn't announced yet, but his friends have been raising campaign funds for him. McCreary has maintained that he doesn't want to get the governor's race mixed up with the U. S. Senate and congressional races this fall.

Patton is a graduate of the University of Kentucky school of engineering and has been very successful in his high positions. He is a native of Louisa. McCreary is a native of neighboring Greer County. Both have a following in Eastern Kentucky.

Political observers here draw the conclusion that Patton would be cutting into McCreary's territory and thereby offering other candidates, if they all stay in, a better opportunity to win the governor's race.

However, McCreary doesn't endear himself to the coal industry in the 1978 session of the legislature when he counseled with Gov. Carroll to oppose some legislation the coal industry wanted.

McCreary also was a friend of "Hunt" when they were all served in the legislature together. Hunt resigned as head of the Democratic Party when the government began to probe into his financial affairs and Atkins questioned the transfer of two state automobiles to members of Hunt's family.

When Hunt resigned he gave as his reason the investigation of his financial affairs, but Gov. Carroll said the real reason was that Hunt quit to help McCreary in his campaign. McCreary has repeatedly said since then that Hunt will have nothing to do with his campaign. In other words, he wants no part of Hunt in the campaign, and McCreary also is staying a little cool toward close ties with the governor's office.

The FBI also has been asking some questions about coal money being used in the last gubernatorial campaign, but no real facts have emerged from this effort.

Meanwhile, the Republicans are remaining quiet although two candidates, Ray D. White of Bowling Green and Raymond Overstreet of Liberty have announced for the Republican nomination. White is a former state senator and Overstreet is a member of the Kentucky House of Representatives.

Other names mentioned by the Republicans at possible candidates are Governor Jefferson County Judge Mitchell McConnell, and Atty. Larry Papp Jr., who served in the finance department here during the Lunn administration.

Curiosity
Now I am wondering how it came about that the Kentucky Division of Forestry has found itself lacking in walnuts for seedlings?

It seems though I do not know the answer, the division is offering 75 cents per bushel for unshelled black walnut seeds and that might be worth someone's trouble to pick up, provided of course, that he can find a tree or two with sufficient nuts.

Don't ask me where the tree or limb picking is located because the young lady who took the picture didn't tell me and I didn't ask.

The Morehead Forestry Division's phone number is (606) 794-7500 and the office is in Morehead. I wonder whether one would be able to determine the seed or if they will pick some up if the quantity is sufficient.
