$38 Million?

If you object to having $38 million Kentucky tax dollars spent for recreational facilities on the projected Falmouth Dam and Reservoir, a project that would flood thousands of acres of Nicholas County farmland, then write Governor Carroll and express your disapproval.
He is polling public opinion on this project. Why should we pay for recreation facilities for Cincinnati and Falmouth? Deadline for comments is Aug. 31.

This is Coal Country!

Our energy future depends largely on coal... an abundant resource. In this era of oil shortages and efforts to reduce energy consumption, Kentucky has a source of fuel that can keep the factories open and people working and the lights burning in homes and schools.
Coal is plentiful. But like all fuels, it is costing more. In recent years, costs have risen because of inflation and increasingly restrictive regulations on the mining and burning of coal. Inflation and rising oil prices also affect the cost of transporting coal to the power plants. And, coal use requires expensive equipment to control emissions and dispose of the fuel's by-products. KU has been required to spend millions of dollars to protect the environment, and these increasing costs of producing and delivering energy are reflected in your electric bill.
Coal will continue to carry Kentucky through these years of energy uncertainty and will help assure us of an adequate and reliable supply of vital electrical energy.
This is coal country, but don't waste energy. You can help hold down costs — ours and yours — by conserving electricity.

utility had, over the same period of time, disregarded customer requests for better services while continuing a large-scale building program aimed at expansion rather than improving present facilities.

As a result of these findings, South Central was granted an $8,022,000 increase affecting service charges only. These include reconnection charges, directory listings and number changes.
In addition, South Central was ordered to clear up all complaints and eliminate all four and eight party lines. The Kentucky utility serves customers in 24 counties throughout the state.
