Jay Morford, son of Dr. and Mrs. Jack Morford, was the fourth fastest in Class B of the Bowling Green State Derby Sunday in Bowling Green. The trip, which started last Thursday, was sponsored by the Carlisle-Nicholas County Chamber of Commerce. Of the 39 entries for safety inspection, Jay's record passed with flying colors. It took young Morford three months to design and build the vehicle.

Five students from Nicholas County enrolled at Morehead State College for the summer term are Larry Cameron, Betty Jacobs, John Jacobs, Anne Genevieve White and Milton Whitlitt.

Something is afoot down... And that something is drive a new station wagon, especially one with a four-speed transmission. Although I cut my eye teeth on motorcycles with an assortment of gear shifts and clutches, my attempts have been confined to shifting in reverse on the new wagon. At the Mercury rear Tuesday morning all work into the back of the Legion building ceased. Really gentlemen, I'm not that stupid!

Holy cow or holy cow?
While the thought waves are on NKs, I remembered what Jeff told me last week when he took the Mercuro to Millersburg. Market on his iron steed. He got to m.p.g.
He had an old denim jacket tied over the papers which went astray someplace. Whether he lost it close to Carlisle or closer to Millersburg is moot. As he said, "Whoever got the jacket is in for a surprise when it's washed, all the battery acid that's been spilled on it will give the coat a byte effect."

The Hot Dog Vendor
Listening to the media or reading some of the articles reminds me of the "Hot Dog Vendor?" Call it a recession or a depression if everyone throws in the towel what can they expect?

THE HOT DOG VENDOR

There was a man who lived by the side of the road and sold hot dogs. He sold very good hot dogs. He put up signs along the highway and advertised in the newspaper telling how good they were.

He stood on the side of the road and cried "Buy a hot dog, Mister?" And people bought. He increased his meat and bun orders. He bought a bigger stove to take care of his trade. He finally got his son home from college to help him out. But then something happened. His son said, "Father, haven't you been listening to the radio and walking TV?"

There was a big depression. The foreign situation is terrible. The domestic situation is worse. When asked the father thought, "Well, my son's been to college. He listens to the radio and watches TV and he ought to know. So the father cut down on his meat and bun orders, took down his signs and cancelled his newspaper ads and no longer bothered to stand on the highway to sell his hot dogs. And his hot dog sales fell almost overnight. "You're right, son," the father said. "I've certainly been in the middle of a great depression."

Miscellaneous musings

Up to us
President Carter's speech on the energy situation in America, televised Sunday night, brought home several good points.
But perhaps the best point the President made was that the solution to the energy crisis was not going to come from the White House but "from your house."
That's as succinct a commentary on the real energy crisis as we have heard in some time. In the past few months many people have been lying in on the President as if he controlled the gas pumps. He doesn't, as we all know, but it makes things more convenient when we can lay the blame on someone else instead of shouldering it ourselves.
How many joyrides have you taken lately? How many times have you put off having your car tuned or your tires balanced because of the immediate cost but never thinking about the decreased gas mileage your inaction causes? How many times has the air conditioner run in your house with a window or door open?
These things cost energy. The best solution to the energy problem is to make us all aware that this is a problem and that by thoughtful use of energy we can conserve some of it.
Otherwise, as a television commentator said after Mr. Carter's speech, one answer may be deregulation of

Finance picture poor

By S. C. Van Curen
Kentucky's fiscal outlook for the next biennium certainly doesn't present a rosy picture for the state government.
While state income met budget estimates for the year ending June 30 it did not meet estimates in some categories, such as use tax on automobiles, and cigarette taxes, other areas went over the estimates.
Transportation Secretary Calvin Grayson has said Kentucky will need an additional $300 million by mid 1980 for highway repair and construction.
Federal experts are forecasting a recession while the gross national products figure has dropped below the average increase in the past few months.
There is a built-in increase in the cost of state government as inflation continues to soar. Highway maintenance costs continue to rise in an expected drop in highway revenue from gasoline and other taxes that support the road fund. New car sales will be among the first to feel the effects of a recession and this means less revenue for the road fund.
Cost-of-living increases for state employees will absorb a healthy chunk of any increase in revenue while cost of services continue to rise.
You can expect education to ask for an increase in its budget under the next governor, but any recession will automatically prompt a call for a modest increase instead of the large figures given in past years.
State income has been increasing at the rate of about 10 per cent a year but if federal predictions are correct, a more conservative estimate must be made for the next biennial budget. The present budget that ends June 30, 1980 is $7.5 billion.
Governor Julian Carroll characterized it as a tight budget, but he always seemed to find the
