Social Security is for women also

Social Security is no more a "man's" program than it is a "woman's." Almost all Americans—women, men, and children—are Social Security protection, either as workers or as dependents of workers. But, certain things about Social Security are particularly relevant to women.
 The pamphlet "A Woman's Guide to Social Security" can be obtained free at all Social Security offices.

her family—protection over and above what they already have based on her husband's work. The woman worker should know exactly what her Social Security coverage means to her.
 The pamphlet "A Woman's Guide to Social Security" can be obtained free at all Social Security offices.

Take, for example, the woman who works in a job or profession throughout her adult life. She is covered under Social Security while she works, and she's earning credit toward a monthly income for her retirement. If she's married and has children, she's also earning Social Security protection for

THE CARING CORNER

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works."
 Matthew 5:16
 Those living with two Lexington teachers about education last week. They compiled some starting facts—a large percentage of high school graduates have only a sixth grade reading level. Now, with an eight-month-old son, who one day will be entering our educational system. This situation would be great concern to any parent. What can we do to help our children? What do we as parents need to care enough to confront the situation with such questions as: What do we as parents teach? What do our children learn? What do our children do for us as parents?
 Education is important! (It must be able to read to study the word of God.)
 Join us this Sunday in our educational program. Open for all.

Farm Bureau names two to posts
 Two men have been designated corporate officers of the Kentucky Farm Bureau Mutual Insurance Company by that firm's board of directors.
 Paul Everman and Jim Galloway have been named secretary and treasurer respectively, according to Ray Mackey, president of KFB Mutual. The appointments become effective August 1, upon the retirement of John Koon, who has held both posts since 1955.
 Everman, 46, has served as information director of the Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation since 1961. The Bath County native assumed the post of executive vice president of the federation August 1, the same date his duties as secretary for Farm Bureau Insurance begin.
 Galloway, 55, is a 20-year employee of Kentucky Farm Bureau Insurance. He has been vice president of accounting since December, 1972, and before that served for 17 years as auditor. He will continue his duties in the accounting department.
 In other personnel action by the board, Morris Johnson has been named to a new post as senior vice president of Kentucky Farm Bureau Mutual, and E.W. Keeler is the firm's new legislative adviser.
 Johnson currently serves as assistant executive vice president, a post he will continue to hold. Keeler has been legislative director and assistant executive secretary of the Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation since 1966.
