McBrayer expected to carry Nicholas

By Jeff Kerr
Administration-backed candidate Terry McBrayer was expected to carry Nicholas County in Tuesday's Democratic primary but that may have been the only sure bet in one of the most crowded primaries in recent history.

How McBrayer would fare across the state was not known at pretime but the Greenup native was expected to carry Nicholas on the strength of the administration's support and that of Democratic party regulars in the county.

McBrayer made a last-minute helicopter stop in Carlisle Monday, flying to Nicholas County High School. Accompanying him was 74th District Rep. Adrian Arnold, who was expected to win handily over his primary opponent, Thomas Anderson of Owensville, a teacher at Montgomery County High School.

McBrayer and Kentucky First District Congressman Carroll Hubbard were the only two of the six major candidates to visit Carlisle during the last months of the campaign, a campaign that was marked with charges and counter-charges of buy-offs, involvement in FBI and federal grand jury probes and the hand of Gov. Julian Carroll, who is supporting McBrayer.

McBrayer's chief opponent across the state could have been one of three other candidates: Lieutenant Governor Thelma Stovall, former Louisville mayor Harvey Shouse and late entry John Y. Brown, Jr., the former Kentucky Fried Chicken magnate.

It was Brown whom the McBrayer supporters seemed to fear most in the last week of the campaign as the son of well-known Kentucky attorney John Y. Brown covered the airwaves with several last-minute television appeals for voters.

Whoever the victor was in Tuesday's race he or she will probably face former Gov. Louie B. Nunn in the November election. Nunn was expected to win handily over Ray White, his chief opponent.

On the local scene two county-wide offices, coroner and jailer, were to be decided along with two magistrate races, in Districts Two and Four. All the posts were vacated by either death or resignation.

The most hotly-contested local race was seen to be the campaign for jailer appointed when former jailer Lynn Bowles resigned, facing a field of three other candidates, including Bowles, who was seeking his former post.

At pretime Tuesday voter turnout in the two city precincts was running above average but no word had been received from the county precincts. The good weather Tuesday may have kept some county farmers in the fields setting tobacco but the city turnout three hours before the polls were to close was seen as more than half the registered voters.

Complete election returns will be in next week's Mercury.

Memorial Day in Carlisle was bathed in sunshine with just a few fleecy clouds in the sky. Thanks to the efforts of many volunteers the Carlisle Cemetery was neat and trim for the many local and out-of-town visitors who came to honor their loved ones. A ring of flags encircled Carlisle's monument to the war dead that guards the front gates to the cemetery. — Mercury photo.

Harry Wolf Sr. dies in Chicago

Harry H. Wolf, Sr. died Monday, May 28, 1979, at Evanston (Illinois) Hospital. He was born on May 7, 1890, at South Solon, Ohio. After receiving his certificate of graduation from Willa Business College in 1911, he became Superintendent of the South Solon, Ohio, Public School System.

In 1915, he came to Chicago, Illinois, where with his brother, George D. Wolf, he founded Wolf & Company, a widely-based firm of Certified Public Accountants. As a CPA, he developed an audit routine that was put into the curriculum of many universities throughout the United States.

In 1942, he founded Wolf Management Engineering Company, a management consulting firm.

During World War I, he served the United States government as head of the Maritime Commission. He was the youngest person to hold such a top position in the U.S. government.

He was an adviser and counselor to a number of large corporations during the late 1920's and early 1930's. He assisted many businesses out of depression.

Moo Moo Clue Two

In 1963 his grandpas of five generations back left our "Mother State" in quite a hurry. Because he thought he had killed a man on whom he had vowed his fury.

Memorial Day

Recreation director appointed

The Carlisle-Nicholas County Recreation Department has a new director and a new summer program lined up for local youths.

Jo Anne Corson, a native of Concord, New Hampshire, is the new director. Miss Corson is a May graduate of Eastern Kentucky University with a major in recreation and parks administration.

The new summer program is a 10-week playground program that will begin June 11 and through Aug. 17. The program will be held at the playground from Monday through Friday of each week from 10 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 4 p.m. All county youths are invited to participate and there will be supervisors present each day.

Some of the special events planned so far are a bobo picnic, an arts and crafts fair, a free three contests, a bicycle decorating contest and trips to Kings Island and a Cincinnati Reds game. For more details, see next week's Mercury.
