profited by Rep. Archie N. Hominer Sr. (D-Valley Station) that would expand the definition of handicapped persons to include handicaps besides loss of limbs, being confined to a wheelchair or blindness.

The bill would also give handicapped persons a portable dical rather than a fixed license plate, which Hominer said made a handicapped more visible to smugglers. He withdrew the bill for further study after objections from some committee members that if the handicapped definition were expanded, there could be a shortage of handicapped parking places.

Agent Orange symptoms detailed for veterans

DAV News Service

Exposure to dioxin-bearing Agent Orange and other powerfully toxic defoliants used in Southeast Asia during the Vietnam War has already killed 1,360 Vietnam veterans and may help from the Disabled American Veterans (DAV) in filing claims for compensation.

Follow-up on these inquiries and requests for claims representation is now being handled by DAV veteran's benefits experts at the 620,000-member organization's 67 National Service Offices across the United States. In addition, a system is in place at DAV National Service Headquarters in Washington, D.C., to bring all information relevant to these claims together under one roof.

Representational Cookery — by DAV National Service Offices in the VA claims process is free of charge to veterans and their families.

"Claims for service-connection of disabilities that veterans believe are the result of exposure to herbicides will be extremely difficult to prove," said DAV Special Projects Officer Bob Leubman, the only Vietnam veteran on the VA's Advisory Board on the Health-Related Effects of Herbicides. Establishment of service-connection would enable these veterans to health care and disability benefits from the VA.

The most common symptoms attributed to dioxin poisoning include:

- Numbness in fingers, toes, arms and legs in varying degrees;
- Nervous disorders, especially loss or decrease in the sensitivity of the senses;
- Altered sex drive, including diminished sex drive or impotence among men and increased sexual activity among women;
- Psychological effects, including loss of memory, confusion, aggression or irritability;
- Skin rashes, specifically chloracne, which resembles a severe case of acne and is usually found on the face, arms, chest, back or legs;
- Cancer, particularly cancer of the liver and;
- Birth defects in children born to affected parents — primarily defects of the hands, fingers, feet and toes.

"The DAV is disappointed in the government's response to the Agent Orange question," said Leubman. "The VA and other government agencies still haven't come up with a test to detect dioxin in the body systems of veterans."

"We believe they should be looking into a number of tests that show some promise. The DAV realizes this is a difficult issue for the VA, but the government could be moving more quickly toward resolving the anxieties that the dioxin question is causing for thousands of Vietnam veterans."

Hundreds of thousands of American military personnel were exposed to toxic defoliants while fighting in Southeast Asia. Symptoms attributed to dioxin, an ingredient in some of these herbicides, are now showing up several years after exposure.

Vietnam veterans who have symptoms they feel are related to exposure to toxic defoliants in Southeast Asia should contact: National Service Headquarters, Disabled American Veterans, 807 Maine Ave., S.W., Washington, D.C. 20564.
