to provide a check on some aspects of state government.

Arnold serves on a legislative oversight committee while Ford is a member of a committee that probes personal services contracts with the state. Both committees were mentioned by House and Senate leadership in a welcoming session to state media last Thursday as examples of the new openness in the assembly.

Both Ford and Arnold plan to keep their constituencies in Nicholas County informed throughout the session. Ford's first report appears in this week's Mercury while Arnold is planning to report about every two weeks. Both legislators can be contacted by mail at the Kentucky State Capitol, Frankfort, Ky. 40601 or on the toll-free numbers printed elsewhere in this week's Mercury.
