What to do in February

By Neyyle Shackelford
UK College of Agriculture

Reference books tell us that the name of our second month, "February," comes from a Latin word meaning "to purify." It was the period in which the Romans purified themselves for the many religious festivals to follow during the year. Other sources say the name stems from an ancient and forgotten term meaning a "time that tries the patience," and certainly it does.

First and foremost, February's weather is a tantalizing mixture of thaw and promise. One day it may be warm enough to go barefoot; the next cold enough to freeze the whiskers off a polar bear. On another day violets may bloom in the meadow and Oconee Bells in the woodlands; the next icicles may festoon the eaves.

Certainly February is a month of uncertainty and its promises of spring are often false and as insubstantial as shadow pictures on the wall. It is the month of the hunger moon of the Indians: the month in which the farm wife has to stoop low in order to retrieve potatoes from the bin in the cellar; and a time of year when the farmer looks at his haymow and wonders if he will have enough roughage to last until grass grows green again in the pasturefields.

In times past, February marked the beginning of the planting season in Kentucky and other Border States. On the 14th day, many old timers went out, rain or shine, and planted what they called "valley peas." These were hardy peas that were broken up, cooked with a piece of middlin meat, and eaten hull and all. The month also called for sassafras tea and a mess of "Hanner-on-the-Rock," an edible wild green of the toothwort family.

For all the tokens of spring that show up in February, it is still a winter month and actually an off month for the gardener. There is one thing, however, that we in the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture remind gardeners. February is the precursor of March, perhaps the busiest month of the year.

With that being the case, gardeners will benefit by doing jobs now that will make spring tasks easier and less hurried. For instance, February is a good month in which to spray for scale insects on fruit trees. The fruit trees can be pruned too, as well as shade trees and ornamental shrubs. But in the case of shade trees, avoid pruning trees like maples and elms that bleed when the limbs are cut off. On fruiting trees, this work is best done after the foliage is well developed, or left until September. Be careful too, to trim only the flowering shrubs that bloom late in the season. Otherwise the blossoming wood on the early blooming varieties will be destroyed. Pruning of shrubbery is largely to remove the oldest wood and to induce new growth from the bottom.

Another good idea for February is to check the garden tools and sharpen and repair them if needed. Check on the seed supply, determine what will be needed, and get the order in immediately.

Checking the Old Farmers' Almanac, there are many other things that can be done with profit in February. This venerable old periodical advises as follows: Overhaul the tractor...Build birdhouses...Mend fences...Order strawberry plants...Buy Mom a box of Valentine candy...Start seed of peppers, eggplant, cabbage, and tomatoes indoors...Build a hotbed and get cold frames ready...Prune grapes...Read a good book...Visit your county Extension agent and talk over your future farm and garden plans with him.

And maybe, just maybe, if all these things have been done in February, "You," as it says in Joel 2:26, "shall eat in plenty and be satisfied..."

One other thing good about February: It is the last full winter month of the year.

Mystery teeth

Teddy Hawkins brought these animal (?) teeth into the Mercury office last week and asked if we knew what they were. We said no but maybe a reader would. They were found near Myers Station. — Mercury photo.

—Ford's Footnotes—

By Senator Ed Ford

As the General Assembly completes its third legislative week, the value of the interim committee system and the prefiling of bills before the session convenes is clearly visible.

The Senate has debated and passed 10 Senate Bills to the House of Representatives for their consideration, as well as two joint resolutions.

The House has placed its approval on a half-dozen House Bills and sent them to the Senate.

Most of the bills in both chambers were pre-filed measures that had been studied during the interim and drafted for the immediate consideration of the 1980 session.

The Kentucky General Assembly is considering several pieces of legislations relating to consumer affairs.

Already passed out favorably by both the House and Senate Health and Welfare Committees is a bill which would establish a Senior Citizens Discount Program. The House bill has been amended to lower from 65 to 60 the age for participating in the program. The bills have been referred to the Appropriations and Revenue Committees in both chambers in order to determine the program's cost.

One of the greatest indicators of the rising inflation rate is readily seen in the cost of automobiles and automobile maintenance. Several bills regulating the sale, licensing, and repair of automobiles have been sent to committees for study.

Following many months of public hearings, House Bill 131 was drafted. The bill would require automobile repair shops to provide a written estimate and the expected completion date of repair work if requested by the consumer. That bill was passed out favorably by the House Business Organizations and Professions Committee on Thursday.

The regulation of milk pricing came to a head last week when several stores in the Louisville area were cited for selling milk below the minimum price set by law. Six legislators from the Louisville area have filed a bill in the House to remove the price controls. At the same time, members of the Kentucky Farm Bureau were in Frankfort this week to promote the interests of the state's dairy farmers.

In Lexington, the heated controversy over Sunday closings passed with the holiday season, but legislation allowing some retail stores to open from noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday has been referred to the House Labor and Industry Committee.

The Senate has also passed a joint resolution calling for a study on the certification of teachers of learning disabled students, including the possibility of increased compensation for such special teachers.

A resolution calling for a study of the feasibility of helicopter ambulance service in the state has also been sent to the House.

The House and Senate met in joint session this week to hear Chief Justice John S. Palmore's report on the state of the judiciary in Kentucky. The General Assembly is expected to review numerous bills pertaining to the state's judicial system, including the need for more judges and increased salaries for judges across the state.

You can reach members of the General Assembly in Frankfort by toll-free telephone 1-800-372-7164 or by addressing mail in care of me to the State Capitol, Frankfort, Ky., 40601.

Maxey Flats

that the amendment is needed because otherwise the bill enfringes on the powers of the executive branch. Rep. Louis DeFalaise (R-Park Hills) said there were "true dangers" from nuclear waste but added the nation "can't do without nuclear power" to solve its energy problems.

Several members objected that reopening the site under the bill would require an expensive special session of the General Assembly. Rep. Archie N. Romines Sr. (D-Valley Station), however, countered that "even one death" from possible nuclear contamination was enough to justify a special session, adding that the state doesn't want to go into the nuclear or hazardous waste disposal business.

Rep. Buddy Adams (D-Bowling Green) said the bill would eliminate the possibility of federal assistance for the site. Current budget requests include about $2 million for work at Maxey Flats, he added.

Worthington opposed the amendment saying that executive agencies had originally agreed to open the site. He called Maxey Flats a "terrible mistake" that had cost millions of dollars "with more millions to come."

The House unanimously (94-0) approved a related measure, House Concurrent Resolution 4, which would set up an advisory committee of persons with nuclear expertise to report on nuclear issues. The commission would cost an estimated $20,000 according to a fiscal note attached to the resolution.

Other bills passed by the House included:

— HB 43, which would allow courts considering pre-trial release or setting bail for prisoners to look at the possibility that the prisoner may (commit other crimes. Current law allows the court to examine only the likelihood that the accused person will return for trial, the bill's sponsor Charles R. Holbrook (R-Ashland) said. The bill passed 84-26.

— HB 61, also sponsored by Holbrook, which would change the definition of a crime requiring a public defender from "$500 or more" to "in excess of $500." He said the bill would remove public defenders from some cases.

Rep. Joe Barrows (D-Versailles) spoke against the measure, which he said could prevent some people who need the aid of a public defender from receiving that help. He said under the bill a person, without prior convictions, accused of driving while intoxicated would be ineligible for a public defender.

The bill passed 73-21.

The House, after passing the four measures, adjourned until Thursday, Jan. 31.
