Food prices rise

By Gary Huddleston
Retail food prices in Kentucky have increased 17 percent since the February survey conducted by the Farm Bureau women's coordinating division registered during the first two months of 1980.

Other local averages were: Sorensen $46.64; Glasgow, $6.09; Oystonville, $8.51; Hopkinsville, $8.51; Owensboro, $8.99; Paducah, $4.88; and Lexington, $5.93.

Unemployment up

Kentucky's unemployment rate reached 17 percent of the state's labor force in February. According to statistics released last week by the Department of Human Resources, 123,100 persons were unemployed in their search for jobs.

Major industry groups experienced increased employment in February, MacDonald said. The number of non-agricultural wage and salary jobs in Kentucky has decreased 13,000 since January, with 4,000 fewer jobs in the manufacturing industry and almost 7,000 fewer in non-manufacturing.

The total number of Kentuckians employed in February was 1,487,708, MacDonald said. "This represents a drop of 10,100 workers since January and is the lowest number of employees in Kentucky since April last year."

Notice

This coming Tuesday, April 1 is Census Day. Please fill out the census questionnaire that arrived at your home and - depending on the instructions - mail it back or hold onto it until a census taker picks it up.

If you need help in answering the questions, call the telephone number on the mailing label on the front of the questionnaire. If you do not receive one, let the local census office know.

Remember: Answer the census. We're counting on you.
