Kentucky Afield

By John Wilson
Kentucky's small game hunting season opens Nov. 20, let's review some of the commonwealth's hunting regulations.
First, you'll need a license — either a regular one or a combination hunting and fishing one. The only exceptions are (1) landowners, their spouses and dependent children hunting on lands they own, or tenants and their dependent children hunting on lands where they reside; (2) Kentucky residents 60 years of age or older, providing they are carrying a card (free from any county clerk) showing age and place of residence and (3) senior citizens 65 years of age or over, providing they hunt only in the county of legal residence before joining the service and carry identification proof of lawful status.
Kentucky residents under 18 years old must obtain a junior hunting license, which is issued only with written permission of the child's parent or guardian. Out-of-state children must purchase the appropriate adult license.
Two increased licenses are available — a three-day small game license ($120) and an annual license ($85). (No-entrant deer or turkey hunters must purchase the annual license and a deer or turkey permit.)
Shotguns, rifles or handguns may be used to hunt small game. The only restriction is that squirrel hunting rifles must be no less than 20 caliber and that shotguns used to hunt quail must be of the type indicated by the June and July figures.
It appears that rabbit populations have pretty much rebounded from the effects of the winters of '77 and '78. Rabbit numbers, which will continue to rise, so we might be on an upswing now. If we are, that's good news for beagle dogs and their rabbit-hunting owners.
Biologists expected that it would take about five years for quail populations to get back to where they were before the cold and the snow hit, and slow annual gains over the last couple of years seem to bear out these predictions.
Hunters should remember, however, that these figures are general statewide averages and that specific local conditions can vary greatly in either direction.
Some sections of the state, where good habitat exists, will continue to harbor more covers and will experience quicker population growth than areas with marginal or poor habitat.
Squirrels, six daily and 12 in possession; rabbits, four and eight; quail, eight, 14 and 20; grouse, four and eight. There is no possession limit on raccoons, but there is a daily limit of one raccoon per person or three maximum for a party of three or more hunters.
Finally, remember that small game seasons will be closed during the Dec. 31 to Jan. 1, 1981 season. Squirrel season will run through Dec. 31; fox season (hunting and trapping) will close after Jan. 31; the last day of rabbit and quail season is Feb. 15 and grouse hunting will be permitted through Feb. 28.
