Proclamation

United Nations Day
NOW, THEREFORE, I, William Power, Mayor of Carlisle, Ky., do hereby proclaim Friday, Oct. 24 as United Nations Day, with the theme of "Alternative Forms of Energy", and urge all citizens of Carlisle to participate in programs and activities designed to increase understanding of the problems and potentials of the United Nations and to develop ideas on how to make the U.N. more effective. The property of both developed and underdeveloped nations has been significantly and adversely affected by prohibitive energy costs and erratic supplies. The world community, through the United Nations, has intensified its efforts to research and implement new alternative forms of energy so that they may sever the inordinate dependency their economies have upon oil and natural gas. One viable alternative is that of coal. The Commonwealth of Kentucky has sufficient coal reserves that should make it a leader in coal production well into the twenty-first century. The U.N. was founded on Oct. 24, 1945 and now has a membership of 132 nations.

Veterans of World War I, where are you today?

Sixty-four years ago, our nation declared war on Germany and Austria in defense of freedom of the seas. Over four and one-half million young Americans left their jobs and classrooms to help win the war that was to "make the world safe for Democracy," and to secure large percentage of those that are living need some kind of care. We, the Veterans of World War I, want to see that each receives that to which he or she is entitled. Our last census report on Veterans of WWI for Kentucky was done in 1977. At

Black Shank cuts tobacco yield

Kentucky tobacco producers took a five percent loss in this year's crop from black shank disease, according to latest estimates. The fungus has become a more serious problem each year since the 1960's when it first appeared in the state, said Bill Nemuth, Extension plant pathologist in the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. A tropical disease, black shank thrives during hot, wet weather. This summer above-normal temperatures in Kentucky accelerated the spread of the disease, "Nemuth said. Although not a major problem last year when cool weather prevailed during the growing season, wet conditions in 1979 helped spread the fungus. This year the disease was noticeable in several plant beds throughout the state early in the season. Looking ahead to next year's crop, Nemuth said farmers can reduce black shank damage to tobacco by planting a resistant variety, crop rotation and fall tillage of tobacco fields. He recommends that growers use Kentucky 17 tobacco variety. Although there are other black shank resistant varieties, Kentucky 17 also has shown resistance to root rot.

Crop rotation will help prevent black shank from becoming embedded in a particular field. The specialist recommends a rotation of not less than three years. However, before a farmer begins rotating he should map out fields to see where he is going to be transmitting the disease, Nemuth said. A thorough discing of tobacco stades from this year's crop will help prevent the disease from increasing this fall on live root systems.
