

Selective Service launches program to select potential Draft Board members

With the agreement of Governor John Y. Brown of Kentucky, the Selective Service has begun a program to recruit and train civilian volunteers for possible future draft boards in that state. This is a part of the nationwide revitalization of Selective Service that was called for by the Congress. The boards themselves would not be established unless Congress directed a return to the draft. However, pre-selection and training of board members in peacetime will be beneficial in several ways:

- (1) It will assure that people selected will be representative of the communities they serve;
- (2) It will give Selective Service time, in the relative calm of peacetime, to train the board members in Selective Service policies and procedures to assure uniform treatment of individuals appearing before boards for postponements, deferments and exemptions — it is the local draft board that makes these crucial judgment decisions. How valued until a mobilization to select board members, with all the choice attendant to such a situation, it would be much more difficult to ensure the appointment of quality boards that would consistently produce equitable results.

By law draft board members are nominated by each state governor and appointed by the President. To be eligible for consideration, an individual must:

representative of the racial and ethnic backgrounds of the registrant population under its jurisdiction. A major goal of this selection program is to provide a fair cross-section in a working-day revival meeting which begins at 10:30 a.m. on Sunday, May 3.

Reagan's plan to cut back on fossil energy research viewed dimly by Ford

The Reagan Administration's plan to slash federal spending for fossil energy research and development by more than $1 billion drew a cool reception last week from Senator Wendell Ford (D-Ky.).

Ford made his disqualification known to Energy Secretary James Edwards as the Senate's Energy Committee began hearings on the proposed budget cuts.

"These cuts strike at the heart of this country's effort to put a national energy program in place," Ford said. "They will stop the clock on the program we are finally making and ever keeping the country from ever achieving energy independence."

The Administration budget proposes spending only $441 million for fossil energy research and development, compared with the $1.272 billion that had been recommended by President Carter. Among the planned energy funds eliminated from the 1982 budget were funding for three synthetic fuel demonstration plants, including one at Newman, Ky.

Ford said the cuts will reduce this country's capability for a strong national energy program.

"There is no way to separate the energy needs of the country from a strong defense," Ford said. "It's not matter how many tanks, planes and ships we have, unless you've got energy."

The private sector simply doesn't have the capability to do it all alone without government leadership and encouragement," Ford argued. "If there ever was an area where government direction was justified it is this because government — and the country — will be the ultimate beneficiary."

The Energy Committee has been considering spending recommendations of its own which will Skeptical? You think this is merely newspaper propaganda? Well it isn't, and not by a long shot either. It's advice directly from the very people business wants and need, if they're to stay in business. It's the collective majority opinion from all Kentuckians...consumers.

A study conducted by the University of Kentucky Survey Research Center has found newspaper advertising to be the most believable and most influential source of advertising when compared to both radio and television. Newspapers also were chosen by an overwhelming 63% of the respondents as the single most preferred source of advertising.

We may be partial, but the UK study wasn't. Neither were the Kentuckians who spoke out, clearly and openly. So, shouldn't your straight line be advertising in

Restrictions on natural gas use is sponsored jointly in Congress

Senate Wendell Ford (D-Ky.) told a Senate hearing recently that removing current restrictions on natural gas use by utilities and industries would provide an increased use of coal by making it easier for coal-burning plants to meet environmental standards.

Ford, who along with Senator Richard Lugar (R-Ind.), is sponsoring legislation to end restrictions on natural gas use for the purpose of meeting applicable environmental standards.

"The use of gas with coal should be permitted solely to the extent necessary to meet federal and state environmental regulations. This approach will increase the possibility for coal conversion by permitting use in areas where coal combustion would otherwise be prohibited for environmental reasons."

Huddleson reports help for small state coal operations

Senator Walter (Dee) Huddleson said that expert legislation approved by the Senate provides a mechanism for smaller coal operations in Kentucky to move into the booming export markets for coal.

Huddleson was an original co-sponsor of the Export Trading Company Act which gained broad support during the Senate's 1979-80 session.

The legislation is designed to permit the use of coal by small coal operations to cooperate in exporting efforts so that they can enter world markets on a profitable basis and on more nearly equal terms with foreign competitors. In addition, the bill provides for limited participation by banks and, for export purposes only, exemption from 4% minimum tax on exports of more than $100,000, adding over $4.3 billion to the state of the ledger in the balance of payments," Huddleson said.

According to the World Coal Study, completed last year under the auspices of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the U.S. may be able to export as much as 220 short tons of coal annually by the year 2000, with an "estimated maximum potential" of 428 million short tons.

The Export Trading Act should expedite last year under the auspices of the Export Trading Company Act which gained broad support during the Senate's 1979-80 session.

"At a time when we are attempting to reduce our reliance on foreign energy sources, it is especially satisfying to enact legislation that helps American energy," Huddleson said.
