Flags' location discovered-

Anyone willing to display them on national holidays?

Bob Barnett dropped in the office the other day to inform as that he knew where the flags we were curious about in an editorial two weeks ago were located. They are lodged in this basement, that the scotts did indeed assume the re-sultant the scotts did indeed assume the re-sultant the scotts did indeed assume the re-ballity for displaying the flags from the Jayosee. He also said that when the scotts were forced to move the flags from their storage place at the old when the flags from their storage place at the old public that the scott of the restoration project by the Night Scott of the restoration project by the Night Scott of the restoration project by the Night Scott of the restoration project that the scott of the restoration project. ags eventually wound up in the most convenient exaction for the scouts to have access to them — the scoutmaster's home.

Barnett said further that with increased demands on his time from his job, he was not able to devote the amount of attention to the scouts he felt was necessary for a first-rate program. He said that the local scout troup fell through in April.

That brings us back to the flags. It seems to us that some local group would be willing to take the responsibility lies see that Old Girty gracet the streets of Cartisle on national holidays. But with the Jaycess now defunct, the Boy Scouts now defunct, and the Chamber of Commerce now defunct, and the Chamber of Commerce now defunct for all practical purposes, what service organization will step into the foreground and assume the responsibility? ume the responsibility?

The first and most logical choices are the American Legion and the VFW. Perhaps they would consider this project? Or perhaps the Historical Society or a church group would take or the task?

on the task?

It could be a small money-making project for whichever group would elect to undertake it.

Local merchants have been paying $10 per year in the past for the flags' upkeep, but Barnett tells us that the money has not been collected for the us that the money has not been conected 101 last few years. We see no reason why an annual illing system couldn't resolve this problem. It worked in the past.

If, alas, no one is willing to take up the yoke, then the flags should be returned to those who paid for them. In fact, upon digging up our original contract with the Jayces, we found that the agreement stated that Jayces, we found that the agreement stated that Perfect that the superment stated that Contract should not be melt, "The customer is to have possession of the flag, pole and bracket for which he has paid and bracket for which he has paid in the contract are listed the

At the bottom of the contract are listed the days on which the flags are to be flown under the agreement. They are: Lincoln's birthday, Amender Forces Day, Memorial Day, Flag Day, Independence Day, Lator Day, Columbas Day, Verenan's Day and Pearl Hardor Day, unique the flags to the merchants would be no small logistic product. With around 40 flags remaining and provided the profinal subscription list, the old way to identify original subscription list, the only way to identify those who paid for the flags would be that mer-chant's receipt. It would not be a difficult thing to

Mortician's attendance is appreciated

At Monday night's joint meeting of the City Council and the Fiscal Court concerning the local ambulance situation, we were pleased to see that Roy Gaunce, of Mathers-Gaunce, was in atten-dance.

Gaunce not only was in attendance, but of-fered freely the information garnered from his experience in the ambulance business. He was An editor's random thoughts...

Why Learn To Spell, Anyhow? by Warren R. Fisher Sr. August 24, 1933

I hate to go above you."

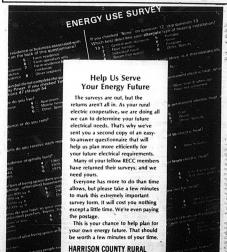

One imagines forlorn little maids with downcast eyes don't apologize thus these days — if they "turn each other down" even in the remotest of little red school houses — and we imagine the of little red school houses — and we imagine they don't. In fact, from the vantage point of a country editor who gets "copp," weird and wonderfully wought more than often, from sundry folk who ought to know how to spell and don't, we would say that the general public. Of course, now and then with the intensity of a free fire to something, we wish the intensity of a free fire to something, we may be a fire the property of the state must "cram" for the match and immediately forget all they learned. If we only published some of the stuff that comes to us as written and told you where it came from, well, do tell;

Oh, well, the poor male children — especially the big-boned and awkward ones - miss a lot of the bij-boned and awkward ones — miss a lot of torture that those of us who were taught to chant and repeat the syllables of "incomprehensibility" had to undergo. The be-approned ones, in the era of ginghams and hair a la pigtali, apparently en-joyed the ordeal— especially if there happened to be an audience — and spelled with certitude, grace and the staccato rattle of musketry. Those of us, of the corduroy pants and overgrown feet;

...stood a spell on one foot lust.
Then stood a spell on Fother,
An' on which one he left the wust.
He would he foot left the wust.
He would he foot left with which we he will then every made the poor lads spell in the gay nineties, but now they are emancipated by the "sight-reading" and alleged spelling with pronouncing the syllables, and by a stenographer with a pocket dictionary hidden under her purse with a pocket actionary nidone under her purse and lipstick, compact and Lockies in the top right-hand drawer of her desk. (Oh, well, have it is your own way — some do walk a mile for 'em and some believe orly one brand satisfies or that there is not a cough in a carlond, to be fair to the induction that takes the poor farmer's weed and induction phoses it into cough 'cures and fat reducers, producers, and the producers and fat

But to get back to our mutton. What's the use of knowing how to spell these days, anyhow? When John Jones dictates to Nellie Smith and he doesn't know and she doesn't know (and why look it was) and the other half when the second to the state of the second to the secon it up?) and the only clue to Nellie's identity is the JJ-NS down in the left-hand corner and to clear everyone's skirts — if any — 'neverything, he marks it "dictated, but not read," why learn to spell? That is unless you are ambitious to become a proofreader - and they are born, gentle reade - born, not made. (And operator, have a care! If any word in this melange is misspelled, you are

The Idle Rambler

by James C. Smith
I became a true member of American society last week. I accomplished that amazing feat by a simple procedure that most Americans have come to accept as an inevitable aspect of everyday living. I became a debtor. Namely, I bought a car.

Perhaps mortgaging my firstborn to GMAC isn't the terrible fate that I suspect it to be. After all the kid could turn out to be a real pain in the neck. But it is rather disheartening to know that now I have to work. I have responsibilities.

now I have to work. have responsibilities.

That may seem strange to some. But to someone who has just finished four free years in college with his major expenses consisting of Cruex and weekend libation, it's a rather startling jolt.

In fact, it jolted me back into some obscure

In fact, it jolted me back into some obscure missings on the state of our society. About the strange ease with which we commit ourselves economically for years. This paper economy we've created seems rather fragile to me. What ever happened to the old batter economy?

Good point. But remember the days when our oriental friends had to carry around wheelbarrows full of yen for a loaf of bread. Or try carrying around enough $1 bills to do grocery shopping, pay your utilities and fill the car up with gas sometime. Ah Ha!

Someone else will probably say, "Boy, you're gettin' a real deal. What if you had to save up the

But wait a minute, didn't many of our founding settlers come to this country as indentured servants to escape debtor's prisons? Is that not where I'm now headed? Oh well, enough of this
