Kentucky Business Scene

1981 Kentucky Business Ledger
Good times or bad, there is no movement of Kentucky's economy that is always on the march. That's the military.
While Department of Defense spending funds its way into practically all corners of the Commonwealth, it is most noticeable in the communities surrounding the huge Fort Campbell and Fort Knox Army installations.
For example, the $650-million Fort Campbell post, which straddles Kentucky and Tennessee, had total expenditures of $400 million last year. Fort Knox, meanwhile, is expected to pump some $119 million into the area economy this year.
The largest amounts from these expenditures go for salaries, both military and civilian. Fort Campbell paid out $327 million last year, of which $40 million went to its 4,200 civilian employees. The nearly 7,000 civilian employees at Fort Knox earn about $52 million.
Payroll earnings ripple throughout the local economies in housing, purchases of goods and services and in investments at local financial institutions.

The fact that we regularly issue more than 4,000 paychecks to civilian workers has a pretty stabilizing effect on the local economy," said Col. R.C. Brant, Fort Knox post commander.
Much of the stable military payroll changes hands in surrounding communities as well. Les Pinckham, owner of a car dealership in Elizabethton, estimates that about 25 percent of his business comes from Fort Knox. "We find that a majority of the young military personnel have excellent credit," he notes.
Evlyn Campbell, marketing director of Penryville Mall in Hopkinsville, notes that many of the mall's bargain sales are timed to Fort Campbell payrolls. "Certainly we want the fort's business; they're never on strike out there."
Construction contractors and other businesses offering various services find the military posts fertile income sources.
For instance, Howard Pence Construction Co. of Elizabethton, currently is working on a new maintenance facility, making changes in the post hospital's electrical system and replacing streetlights in a residential area.

Radloff Concrete is another area firm benefiting from Fort Knox's $72 million budget for new construction and purchases of supplies and services.
The firm is working on a maintenance training facility and an addition to the Patton Museum.
Fort Campbell has appropriated $50 million this year for the purchase of supplies and services. Among Kentucky businesses receiving portions of that are National Temperature Control, Hopkinsville; for refrigeration parts and supplies, Koch Corp., Louisville; to replace windows and Penryville Radiology, Hopkinsville; for radiology services at the hospital.
Military personnel often do not post in search of housing and that benefits life into an otherwise slumping industry.

in with the full amount," Brookshire said.
County Attorney Joseph H. Conley said that when bills go unpaid, the county seeks certificates of delinquency which grant a lien on the property of the delinquent taxpayer. That lien is attached to the property until the debt is paid off, or the property is sold.

"Theoretically," he said, "we could force it with sale of property."

car weaving on the road. Curry administered a breathalyzer test to Moss. The trooper said Moss registered a .27 on the blood alcohol measurement. Kentucky law sets .10 as the limit for blood alcohol content while operating a motor vehicle.
The arrest was made at 11:25 p.m. Moss was lodged in the Nicholas County Jail following the incident. He is set to appear in Nicholas District Court on Dec. 4.
The arrest was the second alcohol-related incident in November involving personnel associated with local law enforcement.
On Nov. 8, County Jailer Lynn Bowles was arrested and charged with public intoxication after a car he was driving was involved in an accident on Elm Street.
Bowles was granted a continuance in District Court Nov. 17. His case is also set to be heard by Judge G.A. Famularo on Dec. 8.

Sharpsburg water district gets priority funding rating

The more than 100 Nicholas County residents who are customers of the Sharpsburg Water District got some encouraging news last week at a meeting of the board of directors of the Gateway Area Development District. Gateway ADD Executive Director Vandy Pennington told the board that the Farmers Home Administration and the AD District have given a plan for upgrading the water district's facilities the first priority position for funding, should any money become available through FMA.

Pennington said the priority listing does not necessarily guarantee that the Sharpsburg project will receive funding, but should FMA grant any funds to the Gateway ADD, Sharpsburg will be the first project tackled. Residents of Nicholas and Bath Counties who have complained about the quality of service from the ailing water system for the past few years said their hopes dashed early this year when funding for a renovation proposal failed to receive funding.

Plans for improving the water line were unveiled in January by consultant Robert J. Sturdivant of Mayers, Buderth and Elberode, Inc. of Lexington. The $275,000 project calls for the Sharpsburg district to build a water line to reach just northeast of Owingsville where it would then hook into the Bath County Water District lines. Sharpsburg would then purchase its water directly from the Bath County Water District. The plan also called for a complete upgrading of existing water lines, and total replacement where necessary.

The proposal recommended abandonment of the current plant because of its inadequacies, and because the dam near Bebel, which is responsible for maintaining the water level for the current plant, has been declared a "high risk" structure by the Army Corps of Engineers.

Any approach to correct the dam's structural problems would be very expensive, and would leave customers completely without water service while work on the dam was being completed, the consultant said.
The water used by the Bath County Water District, and to be purchased by the Sharpsburg district under the proposal, originates in Morehead.

Sturdivant said early this year when he announced the proposal that the Sharpsburg district had been guaranteed 27 million gallons of water a month.

The proposal recommended abandonment of the current plant because of its inadequacies, and because the dam near Bebel, which is responsible for maintaining the water level for the
