BGADD gets over $44,000 for training

Dr. Grady Stumbo, secretary of the Department for Human Resources, has announced three employment and training grants to the Bluegrass Area Development District.

The three programs, which are designed to generate employment opportunities for disadvantaged residents of Central Kentucky, are the Bluegrass Homemaker Program, the Targeted Home Tax Program and the Private Industry Council.

The Bluegrass ADD is receiving $44,000 from the department to establish the Lexington Displaced Homemaker Program. This project is designed to train CETA-eligible women who have been divorced, separated or widowed and have no marketable skills.

The city of Lexington has committed Bluegrass Employment Training Program funds to all 17 Bluegrass counties that can be served. With allowances paid to the participants, this project will bring about $200,000 into the area.

This is the first time a Displaced Homemaker Program has been placed with an area development district office. In the past, these programs have been operated by universities, colleges or service-related agencies.

"The ADD has a great many industrial contacts and a knowledge of the skills employers are looking for," Stumbo said. "This is an experiment to see whether those contacts with business can translate into jobs for women who have traditionally been at a disadvantage in the job market."

Surveys of industries have pointed out the type of training employers require. This particular training program will be a 15-week course including: business law, use of tools and machine operation.

"These women haven't had access to the training which would prepare them for today's job market," Stumbo said. "This is an effort to correct that problem. Also employers are not fully informed of the advantages of hiring displaced homemakers or women who are recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children."

Private Industry Council coordinates grants to the ADD for $90,000 to be used by the Bluegrass and Balance of Eastern KY to conduct market research, develop employment projects and share resources in the Lexington-based market area.

Local persons interested in the program should contact the Carlisle office of the Bureau for Manpower Services at 228 Locust Street.

Kay's Kitchen

By Kay Fisher

Don't start the New Year out by having any turkey left. Turkey does not really freeze well. You can freeze it, but it should be used within three or four weeks, and it too soon to serve turkey again after Thanksgiving and Christmas. So if you have any turkey left, serve it now. Have friends in the left, serve it now.

Here are two ways to fix a main dish:

- TURKEY-ALMOND CASSEROLE
- 1 frozen turkey noodle
  - 2 tablespoons margarine
  - 1 cup thinly sliced celery
  - 1 tablespoon flour
  - 1 teaspoon dry mustard, or more to taste
  - 1 teaspoon salt
  - 1/2 teaspoon pepper
  - 1/2 cup toasted chopped almonds
  - 2/3 cups milk
  - 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
  - 1 cup dried pinto beans
  - 2 cups diced cooked turkey
  - 1 cup chopped green pepper
  - 1 cup buttered bread crumbs

Cook noodles in boiling water until tender. Drain. Cook celery, covered, in melted margarine over low heat for about seven minutes. Blend in dry ingredients. Add milk and Worcestershire sauce and cook until thick, stirring constantly. Add cheese, turkey, pimiento, green pepper and drained noodles. Stir into buttered shallow baking dish. Top with buttered

DOE awards solar designers

Designs for a new single-family home at the awards ceremony in the Nicholas County Hospital. The winners in the Kentucky Department of Energy's first statewide design competition were:

Jack Scherrer, a Lexington-based designer and builder, received a check from the department for his design of a new single-family dwelling in Lexington with solar energy. He is winning entry, Scherrer used with passive solar energy gain with passive solar energy gain with passive solar energy gain.

"I think it's important to note," Scherrer said at the awards presentation, "that utilizing solar energy in the design of a building is not new technology. The techniques used for passive solar energy have been around for a long time and are definitely cost effective for Kentucky."

Scherrer noted that although initial building costs are somewhat higher — especially if the services of an architect are required — this expense is offset by fuel savings often in just a few years.

Nicholas architect Gregory Fitzsimmons was awarded $100 for the best retro-fit design. Fitzsimmons also used a greenhouse with thermal mass storage in large master bedroom for his residential design.

Fitzsimmons' design incorporated large areas of vertical and tilted glazing in a later wing added to the home in 1910. The majority storage included solar energy gain; a slab inside to absorb heat from the sun.

Competition was open to all designers, builders, architects and students who were interested in the competition. During the next few months, the department will be releasing a manual of passive solar design handbook featuring the competition winners.

National Geographic

By Susan Lee

National Geographic's "New Service" magazine, which speaks to the needs of the world's largest population, is now available in 100 languages.

In the gallery of the world's languages, however, a few superstars stand out. At least 2 billion people speak one of the planet's 4 billion people know one of the top 10: Mandarin Chinese, Spanish, Russian, Hindi, Bengali, Portuguese, Arabic, Japanese, German, Indonesian and French.

Although Mandarin Chinese boasts the largest total of 800 million speakers, English, with more than 400 million, is the more widespread. Already it's the international language of aviation. And it appears to be on its way to becoming the universal tongue, Kistner asserts.

"It's snowballing effect for English as it goes along," he says. "The more people who speak it, the more people who don't speak it realize they should speak it, and it just keeps building and building like a snowball."

In the United Kingdom and Ireland, the speakers of Welsh and Irish and Scottish Gaelic grow fewer with each passing generation. Two other Celtic languages are in worse shape. The last native speaker of Cornish died in Cornwall 35 years ago. Many remained to be used on the Isle of Man until the late 1800s, but last native speaker died in 1974.

Although some people comment that it is a tragedy, others see it as a trend as a progressive step toward better communications, others agree. It is a trend, but without argument, the number of the world's spoken languages is getting smaller.

Today's total is still impressive, although linguists disagree on the number. Most counts range from 3,000 to 5,000, depending on how many are classified as separate languages or as dialects of the same language.

"Four thousand is a fairly good estimate," says Kenneth R. Foster, a specialist in South African and author of "The Languages of the World."

"One thousand different languages are spoken in Africa," he says. American Indian languages, most of them in South America, account for at least another 1,000. And some 700 languages are spoken on the island of New Guinea — an area north of Australia whose size of Texas and Louisiana combined.

Another few hundred languages are spoken by Australia's 10,000 aborigines, Kistner reports.

"Television, with education, is one of the two most potent influences on younger people," he says. "This is why there was a great battle in Wales recently, and a battle which has been won on a point. We are to have the fourth television channel in Wales as a Welsh-medium channel."

The decade-old controversy did resemble a battle at times, when activists of the Welsh Language Society sabotaged television transmitters. They were uppeaked last year, when the conservative government in London expressed its mind of a campaign promise to create the channel.

Clyfford Evans — leader of the Welsh Nationalist Party, Plaid Cymru — threatened to lead to death, and thousands of viewers vowed not to renew their required television licenses in protest, Millward said. London relented.

"That victory aside, only about one in five Welshmen can speak Welsh today. At the beginning of the century it was one in two. 'It's true that the Welsh one in two,' says the language of older people," Millward adds. "But this, too, is changing. One of the most hopeful things in Wales today is the number of young people who are learning the language. Not just in the home; there's been an enormous awakening in the field of teaching Welsh to adults."

The Israeli example has been a great inspiration to us.

Linguistic comeback

The comeback of Hebrew is unparalleled in modern times. For more than 1,700 years it was unspoken in everyday life, although it lived on as a written language central to Jewish faith and culture. In the 1800s an immigrant to Palestine named Eliezer Ben-Yehuda began speaking Hebrew to his family and pushing for revival of the language. Today it is the major language of Israel, spoken by three million people and for many the mother tongue.

For its return, the ancient Semitic language needed updating. Ben-Yehuda alone created thousands of words, often building on the roots of words which could sprout anywhere, even in the desert. Reporters once said that Ben-Sharon, Israel's first foreign minister, as he was leaving for an international conference, asked the reporter's purpose, he began to answer

World speaks in many tongues, but minor languages are dying

In songs and ceremonies... In language as in food, Krauss multi, warty adds spice. "What if all the restaurants in the world had to become anything? I'm not saying there's anything wrong with McDonald's. What if they all became Four Seasons? Wouldn't you like to be able to eat Chinese food still?"

"We're tolerant of other people's customs," I think, but not our languages.
