Former governors are on KET

Four former Kentucky governors are spotlighted on encore presentations of KET's "Bywords," airing each Wednesday evening through the month of January. The programs, airing at 8:30 p.m. feature governors Edward T. Breathitt, A. B. "Happy" Chandler, Lawrence Wenderlin, and Bert T. Conley in half-hour conversations with Russellville newspaper publisher A. J. Smith. In each of the "Bywords" programs, Smith opens with an overview of each governor's administration — its major accomplishments and concerns — then congratulates a candid interview with his guests. The governors appear on the following dates: Gov. Breathitt, Wednesday, Jan. 6; Gov. Chandler, Wednesday, Jan. 13; Gov. Wenderlin, Wednesday, Jan. 20; and Gov. Conley, Wednesday, Jan. 27.

Nicholas County trailed Pendleton County by 19 points at the end of the third quarter last week on the Blue-Jackets home court. But one quarter idea is certainly worth pursuing. Judge Simon said that the court would like for Burke to talk with the city council and see how much money he would be willing to spend on such a project. The court would then like to hear more from Burke. Burke concluded his written proposal with an allegorical story of a man dying in the desert who has found an old water pump and one quart of water. "Should he drink that quart and satisfy his immediate needs, with the prospect of dying later?" he asked the court. "Or should he take the chance of pumping and possibly have enough water to survive?"

Revenue problems had apparently been resolved. According to Conley's report from state officials, the county in effect controls the local funeral homes' licenses along with their vehicles. Conley said that the county will be the possessor of the licenses — not BGMS. He said this would prove advantageous if the arrangement with the Lexington firms does not work out, and that it could help in obtaining governmental grants aimed at helping local businesses provide ambulance service.

JANUARY MEETINGS MOVED UP
The court moved up the starting time for its regular Jan. 6 meeting. The meeting will begin at 9 a.m. Wednesday morning, as opposed to the regular 10 a.m. time.

The change was made to allow some members of the court to attend a meeting at Morehead later that day with Congressman Carl Perkins and several administrative officials from Washington. The program is designed to acquaint local leaders with various federal programs and how to use them, including where to look for funding of local projects.

employee than to one drawing $30,000 or more. Brown increased the top level pay and has more at that level than the previous administration. Robinson said the increases have gone to the merit employees to the past two years. He said the appointive employees are ranging in pay from $20,000 to $40,000 with some making up to $47,500 top for cabinet secretaries. A bill has been drafted containing the intent to provide more safeguards for merit employees and to make dismissals or layoffs more difficult. One of the stickiest personnel controversies now simmering is Transportation Secretary Frank Meitz' replacement of some highway district engineers with managers who are not qualified engineers.

1981: The year in review

Continued from page 16. Approximately 150 millionaires in the Morehead and East Union areas of the county were vandalized, according to a report from Postmaster John Anderson. and two overtime periods later, the Jackets were saving their third straight win with the Wildcat heading north on the underside of a 48-39 score. It was the best comeback I've seen as a coach," Jacket interim Mike Kenney said. "We were not mentally ready to play at the beginning of the game," he said. But of the comeback, he could only smile.

Kenney said that the influence of headmaster's Talbot Turner, who has been called "probably the best player in the region" this year, "had a big effect on his squad. Everyone was concentrating on him as much," Kenney said, "that they weren't taking care of their own position."

The comeback started with about five minutes to go in the fourth quarter. Details of his settlement were not released until December. South Central Bell eliminated all multi-party phone lines in the county. All phone customers now have either private lines or only a two-party line.

A petition was circulated throughout the county that called for the resignation of Judge Reese Simon and Magistrate Harold Mitchell. Mike Frerking and Orville Adkison for their action in passing the ambulance tax the day after the referendum's defeat. The petition also called for an audit of the county's finances.

The W. R. Stambler Corporation, headquartered in Millersburg, received the President's "E" Award for its work in improving the United States' position in world trade through exporting. Since the award's establishment in 1963, President Kennedy only nine other Kentucky companies have been so honored.

The fiscal court heard a proposal for running the local ambulance service from Blue Grass Medical Services, a private Lexington ambulance firm. BGMS initially asked for a $15,000 subsidy to operate the service.

County Justice Lynn Boyles was arrested and charged with public intoxication after a car he was driving was involved in an accident on Elm Street in December. House Speaker William G. Kenyon died at the UK Medical Center after being unconscious and in critical condition for nearly three days. Kenyon had been admitted to surgery at the Lexington hospital to remove two large blood clots lodged between his heart and lungs. Kenyon was seeking an unprecedented fourth term as Speaker of the House. When first elected Speaker in 1976, he was the youngest Speaker in the nation.

District champion Nicholas County ended its football season with a 31-0 playoff loss to Bellevue at North Eastern Kentucky city. Bellevue went on to become state champions. Patrolman Jim Coy was back on the Carlisle Police Force on Nov. 13, as his $12,000 lawsuit was settled and paid. Details of his settlement were not released until December.

County bus driver W. C. Jefferson was moved from his regular bus route after a group of parents from the Morehead area complained to the school board about Jefferson's disciplinary policies. The city and county made major strides during the year in improving emergency and law enforcement communication under a plan coordinated by Civil Defense Director Russ Bell. The county now has two channels for radio communications — one for law enforcement and one for emergency equipment. The fiscal court came up with the money to purchase the ambulance units from both local funeral homes and to pay the $5,000 subsidy to BGMS from unraised revenue in the courthouse repairs account. Larry Burton, Elm Street, was hired by BGMS to serve as coordinator of the local ambulance service. The homes of Roy Jolly, Hite Jr., Carlisle, and Sidner Anderson, Stoney Creek Road, were destroyed by fire during the week before Christmas. The fiscal court appropriated some $60,000 in unallocated revenue sharing funds from the federal government.

John Burke, Route 2, Carlisle, made a request of the court that an Industrial Authority be set up to promote and eventually bring new industry into the county. Burke suggested that $5,000 of Revenue Sharing funds be set aside for use by the authority in working to attract industry to the county.

The fiscal court awarded a contract to provide the local ambulance service to Blue Grass Medical Services in Lexington. Under the terms of the contract, BGMS will provide the service with certain basic requirements for an $8,000 subsidy. The court moved to purchase two ambulances from local funeral homes for $12,000 and to lease them to BGMS. A petition was presented to the fiscal Average prices at area markets ran around $100 per hundred weight on the opening day of the markets, with a few top grades approaching the $120 mark. County Clerk Rose Scott said that county financial records were open for public inspection in her office. Scott said that she has copies of recent audits and the quarterly financial statement which shows the balance of each coded account for the fiscal year ready for inspection.

No official from the state auditor's office said that the state would be conducting its regular audit of county finances sometime during this fiscal year. Ronnie Mullins, Assistant Director of County Audits for the Auditor of Public Accounts in Frankfort, told the Mercury that the state audits county books every year. That audit, he said involves a "very comprehensive look" into county finances.
