

Opinion

More taxes, but who's accounting for them?

"We would like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

Down Memory Lane Blue Licks to receive shelter

Thursday, July 4, 1981
Miss Beverly Mann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Mann, was crowned queen of the Blackberry Festival Monday evening.

The winning title at the Blackberry Festival Parade Friday night went to "From Yes to Them" and was depicted walking down the parade route at the Nicholas County Hospital and was $100 in prize money.

Miss Beverly Mann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Mann, was crowned queen of the Blackberry Festival Monday evening.

The winning title at the Blackberry Festival Parade Friday night went to "From Yes to Them" and was depicted walking down the parade route at the Nicholas County Hospital and was $100 in prize money.

Miss Beverly Mann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Mann, was crowned queen of the Blackberry Festival Monday evening.

The winning title at the Blackberry Festival Parade Friday night went to "From Yes to Them" and was depicted walking down the parade route at the Nicholas County Hospital and was $100 in prize money.

Miss Beverly Mann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Mann, was crowned queen of the Blackberry Festival Monday evening.

The winning title at the Blackberry Festival Parade Friday night went to "From Yes to Them" and was depicted walking down the parade route at the Nicholas County Hospital and was $100 in prize money.

Miss Beverly Mann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Mann, was crowned queen of the Blackberry Festival Monday evening.

The winning title at the Blackberry Festival Parade Friday night went to "From Yes to Them" and was depicted walking down the parade route at the Nicholas County Hospital and was $100 in prize money.

Page What it has done for me... it can

Surely do for a garden tomato

My tomato...

My tomato...

My tomato...

My tomato...

My tomato...

My tomato...

My tomato...

My tomato...

My tomato...

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

The Idle Rambler

"Officer, I've been drinking and I figured I would get caught quicker if I drove myself."

"Officer, I've been drinking and I figured I would get caught quicker if I drove myself."

"Officer, I've been drinking and I figured I would get caught quicker if I drove myself."

Agree or not Attempt to repeal House Bill 44 gives too much power to the politicians

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

The Carlisle Mercury

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

Editor's random thoughts...

"Officer, I've been drinking and I figured I would get caught quicker if I drove myself."

"Officer, I've been drinking and I figured I would get caught quicker if I drove myself."

"Officer, I've been drinking and I figured I would get caught quicker if I drove myself."

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

"We'd like to see public notices optional," Fred Cressy, executive director of the Kentucky Press Association two weeks ago at its annual summer meeting.

In other words, what he said was he — and the county officials he represents — would like to have it so officials can report to taxpayers how they spend public money only if and when they feel like it. They would like public disclosure of tax money spent to no longer be printed in newspapers for everyone to scrutinize. And, apparently, that was the feeling of the Kentucky Press Association and the Kentucky County Boards Association, whose executive directors were also on the same panel.

Not only do they feel this way, but the three associations are going to lobby at the next Kentucky General Assembly to get public notice advertising either curtailed or at least weakened down drastically.

THE CARLISLE (KY.) MERCURY, THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1981 - 3

LERMAN'S

COMPLETE FAMILY DEPT. STORE

OPEN SATURDAY JULY 4th, 9 to 5

For Your Convenience

JULY SALE!

Men's, Women's, Boy's & Girl's

Men's Short Sleeve "ARROW" DRESS SHIRTS

100% Polyester
Solid Colors
Reg. $12

1/3 OFF
$8.

Sizes 14-17

Men's Short Sleeve DRESS SHIRTS

Assorted Favorite Colors

Sizes 14-17
VALUES TO 8.99

SPECIAL $5.

Men's Belt & Beltless DRESS SLACKS

Summer-Weight Polyester
Cargals - in Fancies
and Solid Colors

Specialty Priced!

Sizes 29-42

Men's JEANS

Regular Flare Cut
29 thru 42

Wrangler "No-Fault" Denims SPECIAL

16.99 VALUE $12.

Boy's Wranglers
Boot Cut, 8-16
Regular fitting

10.88 SPECIAL

Boy's Wranglers

KNIT & SPORT SHIRTS

Men's S-M-L-XL
Boy's 4-10-18

25% OFF

STRAW HATS

Men's Dress & Western

1/3 OFF

LERMAN'S

COMPLETE FAMILY DEPT. STORE

Summer PURSES
Ladies, Wristlets, Bracelets, Bunches, Bags

1/3 OFF

Now... OFF

McGraw-Edison
Thin & Light

20 in. FAN SPECIAL 24.88

7-Speed, All Purpose Styling

HEALTH-TEX
Infants & Children
Boys & Girls

25% OFF

Men's & Boy's Cool Walking & Jogging SHORTS ENTIRE STOCK 25% OFF