County Clerk steps into the computer age

The Nicholas County Clerk's office has stepped into the computer age with the recent delivery of a new $20,000 IBM computer to the courthouse.

The computer will be used to hook the local Clerk's office into a statewide AVIS system which will soon handle all of the licensing and registration.

Rose Scott said that when a customer comes in for a license or registration transfer, all the clerk will have to do is punch in the license tag number and the computer will do the rest. It is even hooked up to a print-out mechanism which will print the new registration form.

The computer is hooked through telephone lines to a main informational bank in Frankfort and Miss Scott said the next few months will be very busy times for her staff as they enter all of their information into the memory banks. The state has promised to enter the first four months worth of information.

By the end of the year, every licensing and registration transaction in the Clerk's office should be recorded in the computer, and when a customer comes back the second time around, the transaction is supposed to take only 15 seconds.

The next couple of weeks the Clerk's office will be on a practice program to work out bugs and to familiarize themselves with the new procedure.

Should the state pass a uniform title registration law at the next meeting of the legislature, the new computer system would be of invaluable aid to County Clerks around the state. In fact, Deputy Clerk, Wilma Cleaver, said she thinks the anticipation of the title law was a major factor in the state's deployment of the AVIS system.

Attorney General to meet with citizens July 7-8

Attorney General Steve Beshear will be in this area July 7-8 to meet with local residents about their concerns and complaints in a series of "Citizen Access Programs."

These programs are designed by Beshear to make the Office of the Attorney General more accessible and responsive to Kentuckians by bringing himself and representatives of his staff into the region to meet with citizens on a one-to-one basis.

"While campaigning last year, I found that many Kentuckians had an attitude of apathy toward state government. They looked at government as 'those people in Frankfort' who spent their tax dollars and give nothing in return," said Beshear. "Through these 'Citizen Access Programs' I hope to help change that attitude," he added.

The Attorney General's Office has a wide variety of responsibilities which include mediating consumer complaints, investigating fraud--in the coalfield, providing legal information on child abuse, assisting senior citizens with problems, including patient abuse in nursing homes, prosecuting welfare fraud and Medicaid provider fraud cases, prosecuting political corruption, handling environmental problems, as-

Elementary school appoints Council

Bill Guthrie, Title I coordinator for the Nicholas County Schools, announced this week the appointment of Pam Anderson, Ira Conyers and Cordelia Smith to the Nicholas County Elementary School Title I Parent Advisory Council. These parents were appointed to bring the total membership of the Council to eight as required by Federal regulations. They were among those parents whose names were on the ballots for the Council which was elected this April. These three parents had the greatest number of votes next to those Council members who were elected this April.

Ballots ready

Mr. Guthrie also announced that the ballots for the election of the Nicholas County High School Parent Advisory Council are now ready and may be obtained by calling the Nicholas County Board of Education Title I office at 289-2264. Any parent of a child attending Nicholas County High School is eligible to vote in this election. Ballots will be sent with a self-addressed stamped envelope so they may be returned to the Title I office for tabulation.

Kentucky Business Scene

Kentucky's best known company isn't even Kentucky-owned any longer, and its fortunes have changed over the years, but the current outlook for Kentucky Fried Chicken has never been tastier.

KFC is riding the crest of a comeback wave that began four years ago when its parent company, Heublein Inc. of Hartford, Conn., exported a team of its brightest managers to Louisville. Their mission was to rescue KFC, the company that made Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. famous.

The company began floundering after being purchased from Brown in 1972. Heublein, the giant beverage and grocery products company which also operates a Paducah distilled spirits plant, encountered difficulties in translating its success formulas to fast food.

Heublein sustained major financial write-offs of two unsuccessful KFC concepts, Kentucky Roast Beef and H. Salt Fish and Chips, shortly after the acquisition. By 1976 and 1977, KFC profits had dropped dramatically, severely impacting Heublein's operating profits.

Other pitfalls included stiff competition from rival chicken chains; unappealing, outdated stores; lackluster-tasting products; inconsistent pricing policies, and poor morale among franchisee holders and employees.

However, Richard P. Mayer, chairman of Heublein subsidiary KFC-USA and a member of the team that staged the comeback, wasn't discouraged, when he first viewed KFC's interlocking obstacles.

"The problems were fundamental. You really didn't have to come up with something as revolutionary as DNA or cracking the atom. Consumer research indicated all the areas of weakness, and from that we pieced together the corrective programs."

By going "back to the basics" of making chicken, KFC engineered a startling turnaround in the middle of a grinding recession that has left some successful fast-food chains groping for customers.

KFC's more than 4,300 U.S. outlets have posted 34 consecutive months of real sales gains, even excluding the effect of price increases. Last year's U.S. restaurant operating profits, which include two other small chains, rose 65 percent to about $33 million, on revenues of $254 million.

In the current fiscal year, average per-store sales of U.S. company-owned KFC stores have soared 16 percent, through the third quarter, compared to the year earlier quarters.

Now that KFC is "fixed," Mr. Mayer discounts the possibility that the company will coast on a plateau. "Our best growth is ahead of us. We're just beginning, really, on some of the carefully constructed new products, because we've not really had to rely on them to get the kind of growth we've had."

"Kentucky fries" and a boneless chicken breast sandwich have been introduced gradually and company officials say response has been good.

They also cite new store volumes, which are 40 to 50 percent higher, as proof positive that KFC is feasting on the rewards of a satisfying turnaround.

In Kentucky alone, there are 36 separate KFC franchises; the two largest franchise holders are Ray Danner, who has 23 KFC stores in the Louisville area, and Bob Ovington, who has 14 KFC stores and is headquartered in Mt. Sterling.

Kentucky stocks on the move last week: Market direction was down. Leading gainers: CONNA Corp. (OTC), to 15½ from 12; Ashland Oil (NYSE), to 37 1/8 from 33¾; Brown-Forman (AMEX), to 63¼ from 60 1/8. Biggest declines: Chi Chi's (OTC), to 9¾ from 15 1/8; Louisville Gas and Electric (NYSE), to 17¾ from 18 3/8.
