Conservation changes made for '81

There were six local farmers who received cost-share assistance in 1980 to complete no-till practices. For 1981, ASCS will be offering two types of conservation tillage practices. The first of which is reduced tillage systems, where a farmer may chisel-plow, till, plant, strip-till, and/or apply herbicides. The second conservation tillage practice is no-till systems, where a farmer uses no-till, slot-plant, or some type of zero tillage planting.

The cost-share rate is $10.80 for 1981, as compared to $9.60 for 1980. This rate is only an incentive to adopt a better system of crop production. The rate of which is reduced tillage systems, etc. A farmer may receive cost-share assistance for this practice a total of three years.

Additional information may be obtained by contacting the local ASCS office.

THE CARING CORNER

Exodus 20:14 "Thou shall not commit adultery"

As he sat in my office, the tears were streaming down her face and her eyes were almost swollen from so much crying. She was only 17. He told me that he loved me more than anything else in the world. He treated me nicer than any one else has. Then, after I went to bed with him, he gives me the cold shoulder. He won't even speak to me now—I feel so dirty and used. What am I going to do?

The girl has learned a lesson about life the hard way... some people say they love us, but only use us to love themselves. That's not love, that's selfishness. True love says, "I respect you so much that I want to give to you and not so much take." When we sexually exploit another person in or out of marriage then we cut ourselves off from God.

Join us this Sunday as we share the "Ten Commandments."

Student drop out basis of study

Why students drop out of school is the basis of a study soon to be released by the Kentucky Department of Education. The study, according to Education Department officials, hopefully will be used by school counselors to predict which students are likely to drop out of school before finishing their education.

According to Clyde Caudill, head of the department's research and planning office, the study had two major purposes - "First, we wanted to improve our ability to identify potential school dropouts through the use of data available to school personnel, and secondly, to describe the differences between school dropouts and those who choose to continue their high school education," Caudill said.

The report was researched by Dr. Donald Martin, currently superintendent of Southgate Independent Schools. Martin completed the study during the 1979-80 school year while employed as an intern with the Department of Education.

The study draws 22 conclusions about dropouts and non-dropouts in Kentucky relating to achievement, attendance and home environment.

The report also includes a "regression equation," which is a formula to be used by counselors in a student's ninth-grade year to determine if he or she is a potential dropout candidate.

According to Education Department officials, a copy of the study will be sent to each school district sometime this week. Additional copies will be made available upon request.
