By S.C. Van Curen FRANKFORT - Food stamps are an important part of Kentucky's economy and may become more so with inflation and unemployment climbing because of the coal strike and other factors.

December. The February total climbed to $24.3 million. When the coal strike started last month, the Kentucky Department of Human Resources sent extra workers to the coal producing areas to sign up striking workers for the stamps.

in Kentucky in December, out of $2.3 million sent through the mail, only $119,000 were replaced. In October 1980 only $100,000 stamps were replaced out of $1.3 million and the figures for November were $179,700 out of $2.3 million.

Agree or Not

Food stamps an important part of Kentucky's economy

There was an adjustment for inflation in January which brought the amount of food stamps distributed in Kentucky for January to $23.3 million in comparison to only $18.9 million in being reported the theft and loss of food stamps almost every week. When this happens, the recipient is entitled to have them replaced by the government.

During the month of December, $1.8 million in food stamps out of $140 million sent to recipients through the mail in the United States were replaced.
