First quarter bond sales reported

Horatio P. Mason, Chairman, Kentucky Volunteer Committee for U.S. Savings Bonds, reports first quarter sales for 1981 were $1,062 million. Kentucky's reported sales were $8,397,267, or 12.86 percent of a 1981 quota of $65,000,000. Mr. Mason stated that sales impetus will be gained during the second quarter of 1981 now that Treasury Secretary Regan has announced the one percent increase in interest rates for all new and outstanding Savings Bonds. Locally, Roger C. Womack, Nicholas County Volunteer Chairman, reported first quarter sales of $674. This represents 13 percent of the Nicholas County 1981 quota of $5,000. "Everyone should know that all outstanding Bonds have also had their rates improved by one percent except Series E Bonds issued May 1941 through October 1941. This latter group of Bonds will reach final maturity on their 40th anniversary this year and will cease to earn interest thereafter," said Mr. Womack.

Heritage Arts Workshop, June 21-26

According to an old Appalachian riddle: "The man who makes it doesn't want it; the man who buys it doesn't need it; and, the man who uses it doesn't know it. What is it?" Verbal folklore like this, along with music, dance and crafts of Appalachia, will be workshop topics during the week-long Heritage Arts Workshop at Morehead State University.

The June 21-26 workshop is part of the University's Fifth Annual Appalachian Celebration, sponsored by the MSU Appalachian Development Center. The annual celebration of Appalachian culture will bring noted scholars and workshop participants to Morehead from across the nation, according to Heritage Arts Workshop Coordinator Dr. Glenn Fulbright. "People will be coming from New York City, Maryland, North Carolina, Denver and even a place called American Fork, Utah," said Dr. Fulbright, professor of music at MSU, "and, if they're like past members of the workshops, they will all comment on the beauty of the area. In addition to coordinating the workshop, Dr. Fulbright instructs a class in the Appalachian art of shaped-note singing. The little-known musical method was once a major part of social life of Appalachia, according to Dr. Fulbright.

"Singing by using shaped notes was common on the frontier," he said. "It was brought to Kentucky with the preachers more than 100 years ago." Other Appalachian forms of music-making will be taught in classes on dulcimer, recorder, banjo and mandolin plus the Appalachian ballad.

All together, more than 20 classes on Appalachian culture will be presented in four areas of interest including music, literature, dance and crafts. Appalachian music include ballads and other songs with noted balladist Jean Ritchie; shaped-note singing, the fiddle, banjo, bass, the guitar and mandolin, the recorder and the moon-tain dulcimer. Literature of Appalachia discussed by scholar and author Dr. Craig Williams and MSU English professor Dr. Tom Doller will be in four categories including folk tales, folk games, verbal lore and ballads and their music. Dances will be taught in the six study areas of mountain squares, American contra, shagging, English country dances, traditional English dances and dance leadership. Crafts of the region will be presented in dulcimer construction, a week-long project in which participants build an instrument, pottery, weaving, quilting and quilting and painting.

Although participation in the Heritage Arts Workshop isn't necessary to learn that the answer to the riddle is a "cotton," many more bits of the Appalachian Heritage will be discussed during the week.
