Sturgill says energy crisis is very real

"Advisers to the Reagan administration who are maintaining the energy 'crisis' is not real are doing a serious disservice to our economy and to our national security," Kentucky Energy and Agriculture Secretary Bill Sturgill told a group of Kentucky business leaders recently.

Sturgill spoke at the Louisville Area Chamber of Commerce's annual Energy Awareness Week Conference at the Commonwealth Convention Center last Monday. U.S. Sen. Wendell H. Ford had been scheduled to deliver the keynote address but canceled when it was announced the Senate would vote Monday on whether to continue funding for the SRC-1 coal liquefaction plant slated for Newman in Daviess County. The House voted in July to continue $135 million in funding through the U.S. Department of Energy.

Referring to the SRC-1 Project and three other synthetic fuel plants scheduled for West Kentucky, Sturgill conceded funding battles will probably delay their construction but that he and Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. are confident the projects will proceed.

"No matter how you massage the numbers," Sturgill said, "we have an energy crisis in this nation. We're 13 years behind demand in gas exploration. More than half the domestic oil wells drilled during the first six months of this year came up dry and the experts tell us we're 22 years away from the commercially feasible applications of solar energy."

Sturgill credited Kentucky's frontrunner status in synthetic fuels development to the 1972 legislation that established a coal severance tax. Half of that money was designated for coal research, and the Kentucky Center for Energy Research was established to be operated by all the University of Kentucky's Institute for Mining and Minerals Research.

"The technology to be utilized in Kentucky's four synfuel plants has been proven," Sturgill said. "Coupled with the ongoing research at our outstanding energy laboratory, the evidence is here that coal can provide the national security we need."

Praising Kentucky's coal industry, Sturgill emphasized the time has come for Kentuckians, as well as all Americans, to recognize the contribution coal has and continues to make to our economy.
