KMA sponsors third annual fair

The Kentucky Medical Association will sponsor the Third Annual Physician Recruitment Fair on Saturday, October 17 at the Ramada Inn/Bluegrass Convention Center in Louisville. All communities are welcome, to participate in the program. Any physician, resident, or medical student is invited to attend.

The one-day program features a session to orient community leaders in the art of recruiting physicians and a four-hour Fair. The Fair provides communities an opportunity to display the attractions of their areas and meet with approximately 150-200 potential candidates.

Kentucky is still faced with a shortage of physicians in rural areas. The federal government lists over 60 counties as health manpower shortage areas. The shortage problem is acute and will remain so for years to come. Active community involvement in the recruitment of physicians will help alleviate this problem.

Last year, over 55 communities from across the state were represented at the Fair. The program has been found to be quite beneficial in providing communities with the initial contacts that have enabled them to recruit physicians to their areas.

For more information please contact Joseph A. Witherington Jr., KMA Headquarters, 3532 Ephraim McDowell Drive, Louisville, KY 40205; or phone 502-459-9790.

Though it is known as a farm state, Iowa has industries that produce three times the dollar volume of its farms. Of the nation's top 500 corporations, 135 maintain plants in Iowa. Many are farm-related, making agricultural implements and processing food.

Tom Wicker is named distinguished professor

Tom Wicker, nationally syndicated columnist and associate editor of the New York Times, has been named a Distinguished Visiting Professor at the University of Kentucky for the 1981-82 academic year.

UK President Otis Singletary announced to the UK Board of Trustees that the widely-respected Wicker will be on campus for three two-week periods during the course of the year.

The visiting professorship is funded by a grant from Ashland Oil. Wicker is the first recipient of the grant which was announced last fall in addition to a $1,000,000 Ashland Oil grant to the university for strengthening the College of Business and Economics.

Singletary said Wicker's first two-week period on campus will be from Nov. 2 to Nov. 13 at which time he will conduct a seminar in creative writing.

He will return on Jan. 18 for a two-week seminar in journalism. The final two-week seminar will begin April 5 and will be built around world affairs.

Wicker began his newspaper career in his native state of North Carolina where he served as a sports editor, telegraph editor, feature editor, editorial writer and city hall reporter for several North Carolina papers.

He served as Washington, D.C. correspondent for the Winston-Salem Journal followed by a Nieman Fellowship at Harvard University. In 1959, he became associate editor of the Nashville Tennessean.

In 1960, he joined the New York Times in Washington and covered the White House, Congress and national politics. He became chief of the New York Times Washington bureau in 1964 and two years later began writing an editorial page column, "In the Nation," for the Times.

In 1968, he was named associate editor of the New York Times and his column on politics and national affairs has been widely syndicated. A graduate of the University of North Carolina, Wicker holds 12 honorary degrees.

He is the author of seven novels and four non-fiction books, including "Kennedy Without Tears," "JFK and LBJ: The Influence of Personality Upon Politics," and "A Time To Die," which won the Christophers Award and the Mystery Writers of America award.

Kentucky's first frost was discovered Saturday

Frost occurred in many areas of Kentucky on Saturday morning, Oct. 3. Temperatures of 32 degrees or less are received this early only about once in 10 years. Late developing soybeans were damaged in a number of areas and generally temperatures were a little lower in the country than at many of the official stations.

Soil moisture is short in many areas east of Interstate 65. Statewide, soil moisture was reported 51 percent short and 49 percent adequate. Last week very little rain was received and most days were suitable for fieldwork.

Weather conditions have been good for drying and curing of burley tobacco. About 15 percent of the burley is cured and ready for stripping as weather conditions bring the crop into order.

Houseburn is evident in about 10 percent of the barns but is mostly light or light to moderate in severity. Weather conditions have been favorable for housing, and considerable tobacco was put up last week. A few late crops were touched by frost.

Corn harvest is 36 percent complete ranging from well advanced in some Western Kentucky counties to just beginning in most northern counties. Last year 51 percent was harvested and the five-year average is 31 percent.

About 90 percent of the corn is mature and overall frost damage to corn is believed to be minor. Yields on early corn have been good with average moisture content of corn being harvested reported at 21 percent. Low prices are the biggest problem, especially among white corn producers.

Soybean harvest is four percent complete compared with 14 percent for both last year and average. Another 33 percent of the acreage is shedding leaves, or mature. However, one-third of the soybeans still have leaves entirely green and some of these beans were injured by the Oct. 3 frost.

It is too early to assess damage, but loss occurs where a killing frost is received prior to the bean in the pod being fully developed. Loss could range from reduced size of beans to heavy loss if a killing frost was received at very late planted acreage.

Pastures are still mostly good but need rain. Wheat seeding is 18 percent complete. Fall seeded grains and grasses need rain for germination and growth.
