

Lawmaker's roundup

New York, N.Y.—A personal-service contract to provide security and transportation for Gen. John V. Brown Jr. and his family while they are in New York City may have raised some eyebrows in the press, but a legislative review panel appears set to approve the $20,000 pact if certain changes are made.

The Personal Service Contract Review Subcommittee asked that Lt. Gov. Marlin L. Hayes' name be removed — as she had requested — and that certain language in the agreement be clarified.

A number of subcommittee members questioned Justice Secretary Nel Welch about how the security officers of the 1952 International would be used — particularly if they would be used to provide services for Phyllis Grogan Brown when she is in New York on private business.

Welch assured the subcommittee that the contract would only be utilized when the Browns are in New York on state business.

State troopers not missed from training posts

Trained law enforcement officers — should be on State Police — should be out fighting crime, not hanging out at the courthouse giving drivers' license tests, according to Gen. Peter DePue, deputy commissioner of the bureau.

Peter appeared before the subcommittee as vehicle regulation to explain the reasons for replacing troopers with civilian personnel. The biggest factor, he said, was filling vacancies in the ranks of the state police. "We've been down to 30 officers out there where there is a desperate need for trained law enforcement people," Peter said.

Civilian law enforcement are paid substantially less, he added, because of the trooper's pay scale and training period. The civilian employees are supervised by the state police bureau, he added.

The subcommittee took no action on a bill sponsored by Rep. Clay Crupper, a Day Ridge, which would require that a sworn state police officer administer the driver's test in each county. Crupper said the residents in his county wanted a trooper there not only to administer the test, but to perform other law enforcement duties. "These civilians don't have the power to make an arrest," Crupper said. "My people would feel more secure with a trooper in the county."

Truth in packaging applies to illegal drugs too

A bill that would outlaw sales of so-called "look-alike" drugs has been endorsed by the Interim Joint Committee on Judiciary, but only after the penalty section of the measure was weakened.

The proposed legislation would make the sale of substances that are packaged to look like illegal "street" drugs, such as amphetamines or cocaine. A first offense under the bill would carry penalties of up to a year in jail and a fine between $100 and $500.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Dexter Wright, R-Louisville, had sought stiffer penalties — fines of up to $5,000 and a prison term of up to five years. Wright said he would push to restore the heavier penalties in the 1962 General Assembly.

Naming buses full passes first legislative step

About 150 people in the packed hearing room rose to their feet and offered legislators applause and cheers when the Interim Joint Committee on Health and Welfare approved a nursing-home reform bill to be prefiled for the 1962 General Assembly.

Nineteen legislators voted for the bill, although several said they will move to amend the act when it comes before the Legislature in February. Three lawmakers did not vote.

The bill would authorize the Department of Human Resources to issue orders to nursing homes that fail to correct violations, appoint a receiver to run a problem home temporarily, establish a rating system for homes, and require nursing homes to admit visitors during certain hours and keep inspection reports and other records on display in the lobby.

Better returns on state investments target approved review

The Program Review and Investigation Board has approved a review of the state's cash-management practices. The changes recommended by the board are designed to "tighten" Kentucky's investment practices into the 20th century and to reap interest-payment benefits from invested revenue dollars.

Many of the committee's recommendations will require legislative action. Among proposals for statutory change are: transferring funds from the Treasury electronically, contracting the services and specifying banking services and other compensating balance of payment, and replacing pledging with an alternative means of securing state deposits.

A recommendation to propose legislation giving the Office for Investment and Debt Management in-house investment authority was approved, but only after a lengthy debate with supporters of the treasurer's office. That authority should be housed with the treasurer, according to several committee members, since he or she is elected by the people.

Two report recommendations were "shot down" by the committee. One proposal, to collect certain business taxes monthly, had already been studied by a legislative committee. The proposal was rejected because of protests by many businessmen who said it put too great a burden on small businesses.

The committee also rejected a proposal to permit investment according to the prudent person rule, but broadened investment alternatives to allow the state to invest in negotiable certificates of deposit, prime commercial paper and government agency obligations.

Committees, subcommittees approve surviving legislation.

The Interim Joint Committee on Elections and Constitutional Amendments has approved several pieces of legislation for pre-file for the 1962 general assembly. All are proposed amendments to the Kentucky Constitution, designed to "clean up" the current document.

HR 126 allows the General Assembly to correct the 1950 non-substantive changes to the Constitution to review and correct the 90-year old instrument. The bill will not be considered relative to drafting, treason and poll taxes and it eliminates the section that provides for separate public schools for whites and blacks.

HR 137 proposes non-substantive changes to the Constitution to review and correct the 90-year old instrument. The bill will not be considered relative to drafting, treason and poll taxes and it eliminates the section that provides for separate public schools for whites and blacks.

Long-term care bill enters subcommittee scrutiny

A recent meeting of the long-term care subcommittee featured a heated debate between the panel's chairman Ben Gerta Reed, D-Louisville, and Rep. Bob Heisterberg, R-Louisville. Heisterberg presented to subcommittee members a substitute version of the nursing home regulatory bill authored by Reed. Among other things, the version would create a state bureau for long-term care — a measure opposed by state officials — and would change the proposed system of fines.

Despite the criticism, the original bill with only minor amendments was sent to the Interim Joint Committee on Health and Welfare.

Retirement system cutback in outlook at all

Committees named for certification

Two committees have been selected to work on some of the floor points in changing the criteria for certification of prospective teachers.

Appointed by Superintendent of Public Instruction Raymond Barber, the committees will be charged with an examination for assessing competency over certification and an on-the-job internship program for teachers.

A Test Selection Committee will develop a written test to measure skill levels of a prospective teacher in the areas of reading, writing, mathematics, professional education concepts and the student's major teaching field.

The "portfolio" test "will be administered following admission to student teaching.

An Internship Process Committee will develop a method for evaluation of a teacher for one year in the classroom before being awarded a license. A by-law setting before the board.

The evaluation would be accomplished by a three-person team from the local district using the performance assessment instrument developed by the local district when taking office," Barber said, "and is supported by a report from the committee on Higher Education in Kentucky's Future."

That's because the retiring system "simply intends to surrender excess state appropriations that have accumulated in its fund, and the surplus should be used for the announced cut."

Pat Miller, the agency's executive secretary, told the Interim Joint Committee on Appropriations and Revenue that the surplus had accumulated because the state had not provided its required matching contributions to the fund.

The announcement of the surplus means as a surprise to committee members, who questioned Miller closely about the agency's finances. They questioned how such large surpluses could accumulate in these austere budgetary times.

Miller, however, explained that the state repayment of the fund occurred because Education Department personnel were cut, teachers' salaries hadn't risen to expected levels and such classrooms units hadn't been funded as planned. These factors led to an inflated estimate of the necessary state match, he said.

"Moonshine" for motorists alcohol-plant tested

Kentucky's motorists have been told that by the end of 1961, the Hardtown Fuel Alcohol Co. will be producing at the Willett Distilling Co. in Nelson County. The subcommittee on energy, production, marketing and utilization of the Interim Joint Committee on Energy recently visited the site of the Kentucky's first alcohol plant.

During the 1960 General Assembly, lawmakers created tax incentives to help induce such alcohol-fuel development in the state. However, the subcommittee members didn't hold out much hope for future state aid to infant alcohol operations because of existing problems facing the Commonwealth.

Although there are some 600 installations of higher learning in China, there is room in China's colleges for only about four percent of the high-school graduates who apply.
