setting is teeming Zanzibar just before the American Civil War, when the "Isle of Cloves" was an important center of the African slave trade.

The Lord God Made Them All by James Herriot. The warm and joyful memoirs of the Yorkshire veterinarian continue in The Lord God Made Them All. James and his wife now have two children, the war is over, and life on the glorious dales is back to normal. It's pure James Herriot, with all the warm and lovable characters, human and animal, that his readers have grown to love.

Masterstroke by Marilyn Sharp. A brilliantly plotted international suspense thriller from the author of Swallower. As the world eagerly awaits the signing of a peace agreement between the U.S. and Russia, the Assistant Secretary of State, who was instrumental in the pact's conception, begins to uncover its true and devastating purpose.

The Glitter Dome by Joseph Wambaugh. Four acts of police partners work in Hollywood, enmeshed in the glamour and the grime, the hustle and the horror, and then try to forget their problems in the after-hours watering hole.

The Clowns of God by Morris West. After the reigning Pope, Gregory XVII, claims to have received a private revelation, the Cardinals declare he must resign or be declared insane and whether Gregory is a mystic, a lunatic or an ambitious fanatic remains in question.

Love, Dad by Evan Hunter. A young woman leaves home during turbulent early '70s seeking freedom and self-expression, yet on her return, she cannot accept her father's pursuit of self-fulfillment through his divorce and remarriage.

The Love Hunter by Jay Hassler. In this story of love, friendship and possible murder, one man's decision whether to help his slowly dying friend is a swift and easy death in complicated by his love for the friend's wife.

Any Two Can Play by Elizabeth Cadell. When her brother is left the sole parent of twins, Natalie Travers arrives to help and ends up falling in love with the scion of the town's founding family.

Will You Love Me In September by Philippa Carr. In early 18th century England, young Clarissa succumbs to the charms of Lance Clavering, who may imperil her fortune and her life, and confronts rebel Dickon Frensham who may be her salvation.

Angel of Light by Carol Joyce Oates. When Maurice Hallack, a Minister of Justice accused of corruption, dies an apparent suicide in a car accident, his children, believing he was betrayed by their mother and her lover, seek revenge.

Cathedral by Nelson DeMille. A band of Irish extremists led by Brian Flynn seizes St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City on St. Patrick's Day and demands the release of prisoners from Long Kesh prison in Northern Ireland.

Family Affair by Mignon Eberhart. While the wealthy New York family of her absent fiance attempts to cover up a murder, Sarah seeks the murderer on her own and soon realizes that the killer must be a member of the family she loves.

A Place of Ravens by Pamelia Hill. After being removed from the decadent court of James I and forced into a thoroughly unsatisfying marriage, the beautiful but penniless Clemency Holles pursues a true fulfilling love while trying to preserve the stately Ravensyard.

Kentucky Business Scene

(c) 1981, Kentucky Business Ledger, Inc.

The synthetic fuels industry, on which so many hopes for Kentucky coal have been placed, is not exactly alive and well.

But it's alive. And even that is somewhat of a surprise to many observers, who had predicted an end to the state's hopes of cashing in on new uses for coal.

Escalating costs, environmental objections and — perhaps most importantly — negative signals from Washington about government financial assistance were beginning to seem like trump cards played on Kentucky's ace in the hole.

But as recent events dictate, state government officials and synfuels investors aren't giving in.

In late August, the state Department of Energy concluded an option to purchase the main plant site for a $4 billion Tri-State Synfuels Co. project in Henderson County. Governor Brown's administration has banked much of its hopes for synfuels on this project, which would use the so-called SASOL process of indirect coal liquefaction.

The SASOL process has been used commercially in South Africa since 1955, and a test of western Kentucky coal has been underway at a South African plant since mid-summer. The results — which are expected to show whether Kentucky coal will perform satisfactorily in the SASOL process — were due in late August but have been delayed until mid-October. Sources said early results were positive, however.

The Tri-State project is a joint venture of Texas Eastern Corp. of Houston and Texas Gas Transmission Corp. of Owensboro. The two-year option taken by the state Department of Energy involved payment of about $1.2 million for a total of almost 7,000 acres.

The state has already invested another $4 million in the project, to cover the costs of mining, shipping and testing the Kentucky coal in South Africa.

Two other synfuel projects in Kentucky are considered by the state Energy Department to be proceeding slowly but steadily. They are the Breckinridge County project of Ashland Synthetic Fuels, which will use the H-coal process of direct coal liquefaction, and a W.R. Grace project in Henderson County, which would use indirect coal liquefaction technology.

Ashland is already testing its process at a demonstration plant in Catlettsburg, and about 90 percent of the design work and engineering cost estimates have been completed for the Breckinridge plant. Ashland will seek loan guarantees for the commercial-scale plant from the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp., which is assuming responsibility for such federal assistance.

W.R. Grace also is awaiting word from the Synfuels Corp. on its proposal, made last March, for loan guarantees.

A fourth major Kentucky synfuels project has had more of a see-saw history but was rescued for at least one more year by intensive lobbying in Congress. The Reagan administration had proposed cutting off funding for the SRC-1 plant at Newman, a project of International Coal Refining Co. as a joint venture of Wheelabrator-Frye and Air Products and Chemicals, but Congress approved $135 million to carry the project until Oct. 1, 1982.

The plant obtained the aid of a number of politically potent members of Congress. No fewer than 80 House Republicans deserted the President on the vote, and they were joined by many of the southern Democrats who were instrumental in giving Mr. Reagan his tax and budget victories.

Kentucky Energy Secretary William Sturgill said he was confident that the SRC-1 plant will be built, "although delayed," along with the other three major synfuels projects.

Several years ago, as many as nine synfuels projects had been proposed for Kentucky, but five were either intended as demonstration projects or have been dormant in recent months or have been shelved: The Tri-State, Breckinridge, Grace and SRC-1 projects are now leading the pack.

Kentucky stocks on the move last week: Market direction was down, with no gain for the week recorded for any of the 25 stocks in the Kentucky Business Ledger index. Largest losers: Chi-Chi's (OTC), to 20 1/8 from 22¼; Jerrico (OTC), to 21 7/8 from 24½; Texas Gas Transmission (NYSE), to 35 7/8 from 39 3/8.

August fuel costs

The average price per gallon for gasoline in Kentucky dropped one cent at full-service pumps since the middle of July and increased one cent at self-service pumps, the Blue Grass Automobile Club-AAA announced.

AAA's August Fuel Gauge survey of stations along Kentucky's major highways shows the average price per gallon at full-service pumps is now $1.37 for regular; $1.42 for no-lead; and $1.47 for premium no-lead. The average price per gallon for diesel fuel is $1.41. Self-service prices range from 3 to 10 cents lower than full-service and are now $1.27 for regular; $1.34 for no-lead; and $1.44 for premium no-lead.

The availability of gasoline for the coming Labor Day holiday is outstanding, with 92 percent of the station contacted to be open. Almost 65 percent of the stations will be open all day Sunday; 71 percent will be open past 6 p.m. on Saturdays; and 66 percent will be open past 8 p.m. on weekdays.

New proprietors

Hughes' Grocery became Jones' Market Monday morning as Mr. and Mrs. David Jones arrived at the store for their first day as its new owners.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones have recently moved to Carlisle from Mason, Ohio, and are residing at 358 West Main. They have one daughter, Nancy, who will be a sophomore at Nicholas County High School this year.

The Joneses are native Lexingtonians, and they said they plan no major changes in the Main Street Grocery. They will be open for business from 7 a.m. until 6 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from 8 a.m. until 6 p.m. on Saturdays.—Mercury photo.
