Congressman Larry J. Hopkins reports to the Sixth District of Kentucky

All the publicity has the three-week session of Congress billed as "lame duck," giving the impression little is going to be accomplished. True, the Congress will likely fail to resolve the bulk of major issues pending before the House and Senate, but we're grappling with issues which can't be solved without deliberation. Below are some of the most frequently asked questions so far during this session.

Q: How will you vote on the proposed five cents per gallon tax?

A: I may be in favor of the gasoline tax, but there are too many unanswered questions for me to say right now. There's a danger this bill may turn into the biggest Christmas tree in Congress, with a little tax here and a little tax there added on. Before I vote for it, I must be assured the benefits — measured in jobs and improved highway construction — outweigh the burdens of an increased tax.

Q: What is the outlook of the tobacco price support program?

A: The bottom line is that now, over and above the predictable onslaught on congressional battles, we in tobacco states must keep track of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. This year, the USDA announced it was not going to pay tobacco farmers as much as they said at the beginning of the growing season. Cutting the program was not the total issue, since the level announced still represented an increase over last year. The major point was the timing of the cut, one week before the market opened. Had support prices been cut in the spring, farmers could have planted accordingly. But they planted, based on promises and assurances from the USDA that the price supports would be forthcoming. Now, the USDA admits it made a "bad guess." This frank admission doesn't help.

I will do everything in my power to make certain the USDA doesn't make such mistakes again. I will, regularly contact the USDA officials and make them give me a straight answer, in writing, about what they're basing price support decisions upon, and what factors will trigger future decisions.

Q: What was the highlight of your NATO trip to England, Germany and Geneva?

A: I don't want to minimize the gratifying aspects of the trip I took to Europe as part of an Armed Services Committee delegation. I learned an enormous amount of useful information, not just about our NATO positions, but also about our nuclear arms talks and where we are in START negotiations. I could go on for hours about that.

But, I think my most lasting impression will be of the moment I stepped into Communist East Germany. The first thing you notice is there's no one on the streets; there's no advertising, no sign of color or personality; windows are bleak and cold. Then, when you finally do meet a person out walking around, they stare at you; they won't look away. And the message from those haunting eyes is: Get me out of here. It's obvious they're not happy; they're miserable.

When I crossed back through the wall dividing East Germany from freedom, I was so glad, so proud, and felt so lucky to be an American. I realized as never before that, sure, we've got problems in this country — social security, high interest rates and unemployment — but we can work them out. Those people have nothing. Not even hope. It made me appreciate this great country and all we have; and, if I could arrange it, I'd have every American walk, as I did, just for a few moments in the purgatory that's communism. I'm resolved to do all I can to avoid that fate for America.

Three wrecks reported in city, county

Three persons were reported injured and taken to Nicholas County Hospital following a chain reaction rear-end collision involving three cars Friday evening at about 9:15 p.m., on West Main Street in Carlisle, according to city police reports.

Cars involved were driven by Barry C. Myers, 18, of Carlisle, Tim Hall, 17, Route 1, Carlisle, and Mark Wade, 16, Carlisle. The collision is reported to have happened when the Myers vehicle stopped suddenly and the two cars behind him were unable to stop in time. Hall and two passengers were taken to the hospital.

Two single car accidents were reported in the county on Friday and Saturday by sheriff's officials and by the Headquarters Constable.

On Friday, Dec. 3, at about 9:50 a.m., on the Saltwell Road, a car driven by Phillip T. Robb, 16, of Paris, is reported to have been forced off the road after meeting a truck. Robbie Dix, 16, was a passenger in the car.

On Saturday, Dec. 4, at about 5:30 a.m., a car driven by Dennis Jackson, 18, of Route 3, Carlisle, ran off the left side of U.S. 68 about five miles north of Carlisle. The car proceeded over a bridge abutment and down into the creek with heavy damage being sustained by the vehicle. Jackson was taken to Nicholas County Hospital.

Plan garden around rotations

One of the simplest methods for reducing disease problems in the garden is to rotate vegetable crops. Many diseases, such as early blight of tomatoes and club root of cabbage, can overwinter in the soil and multiply from year to year if the same host plants are grown continuously.

A four year rotation is probably reasonable for most gardeners, says Dr. Jean English, Extension horticulturist at the University of Kentucky's Robinson Substation in Quicksand.

Potatoes, tomatoes, eggplant and peppers can be grown in one plot. These crops require highly fertile soil and are subject to the same diseases.

The following year these so-called Solanaceous crops should be moved to a second plot, and the first plot should be limed if necessary and planted with legumes, such as beans and peas and brassicas (cabbage, cauliflower, broccoli, kale and kohlrabi).

In the third year, this plot can contain vine crops and salad crops. Finally, root crops, such as carrots and beets, can be planted the fourth year.

Just as any building this rotational scheme for four years, three other plots can contain different stages of the rotation, explained English. "A five year rotation, with a legume green manure during the fifth year, would be ideal," she said. The legume will shade competing weeds for subsequent crops if thickly sown.

Legumes also provide nitrogen if inoculated and bring essential nutrients to the top layers of garden soil if deep rooted, such as alfalfa.

Homemakers program offered

The Bluegrass Displaced Homemakers Program at the Bluegrass Area Development District is offering training at Central Kentucky Vocational School for women in business and office.

The B.E.T.P./C.E.T.A. training program is for persons who, because of death or disability of their spouses, divorce or desertion, must become the wage earners for their families. Those persons admitted to the program will be given vocational training, employability skills training and counseling services in order to develop skills which will allow them to sustain themselves and their dependents.

The participants will be involved in a two-week program of orientation and a one-week assessment for job readiness. A career outline will be developed for each participant which will identify employment barriers and establish career goals. All persons interested should contact the Bluegrass Displaced Homemakers Program office at 606-273-6056.
