Unique geological map of Kentucky released at UK

A unique new wall-size geological map of Kentucky, representing 18 years of mapping work, has just been released.

The color map was produced by the U.S. Geological Survey in cooperation with the Kentucky Geological Survey located at the University of Kentucky.

The map is unique, according to state geologist Donald Haney, because it is the first and only state map ever produced in detailed form from geologic quadrangle maps which were already available from the KGS.

The map is printed on three separate sheets, each 42x56 inches, and covers a wall area of about 4x10 feet, says Donald Hutcheson, editor and head of the publications section at KGS.

The scale is 1:250,000 or one inch equals four miles. The map shows the surface distribution of various types of rocks throughout the state. It also shows geologic structure, faults and coal beds present at the surface. It will be useful in prospecting for mineral resources, Hutcheson says.

Copies may be purchased from the Kentucky Geological Survey, University of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky. 40506. The KGS publications office is in the basement of Breckinridge Hall on the campus and is open weekdays from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The map is $14 plus five percent Kentucky sales tax for state residents. By mail, add $2.10 for fourth-class postage. Copies are also available from the U.S. Geological Survey, Branch of Distribution, Arlington, Va. 22202.

Geologic quadrangle maps are available at $3 each, plus tax and shipping charge.

Kentucky Afield

Waterfowl outlook bright

by John Wilson

Things are looking good for Kentucky duck and goose hunters, according to Vernon Anderson, the wildlife biologist in charge of waterfowl research for the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

Anderson, who conducted a waterfowl census in Western Kentucky just before the duck season opened Dec. 2, says that both waterfowl populations and hunting conditions look better this year than they have for the last several seasons.

Although overall duck populations aren't up that much, the birds do seem to have moved south a little earlier than usual this year, Anderson says. The goose population is up slightly and, like ducks, geese have moved into the state somewhat ahead of schedule.

The heavy rains of recent weeks have also helped, according to Anderson. Many of the hardwood bottoms and creek banks in West Kentucky are flooded, providing excellent waterfowl habitat.

"It's been dry the past couple of years," Anderson says, "and the ducks just haven't had anywhere to go. So all in all, I'd say that we're going to have a better early season than we've had for a while."

What happens as the season progresses toward its Jan. 20 close (for both ducks and geese) will depend largely upon the weather. Ideally, it will be cold enough up north to drive ducks and geese into Kentucky but not so cold here that ponds and lakes will freeze over and force the birds further south. There's plenty of waterfowl food available this year, so if the waters stay open the birds should remain, Anderson says.

Most of the duck and goose hunting in Kentucky takes place in the western-most portions of the state. Surveys show that around 70 percent of all ducks taken in the commonwealth are harvested west of Owensboro.

But knowledgeable hunters in more eastern parts of Kentucky also do quite well on ducks, either by jump shooting creeks or ponds or by floating down the larger rivers. When small ponds freeze over, ducks concentrate on the larger, flowing bodies of water and are easier to find, so most avid Central Kentucky waterfowlers wish for bad weather.

The goose season opened Nov. 12 over most of the state, but hunters in the westernmost portions of Kentucky must wait until Dec. 12 for their opening day. The daily limit on geese is five, with no more than two Canadas or two white-fronted geese allowed. The possession limit is 10, with only four Canadas and four white-fronted, after two or more days of hunting.

Duck limits are based on the point system again this year, with no changes in point values from the past couple of seasons. The canvasback is the only 100 point duck, while ten mallards, wood ducks, black ducks, hooded mergansers and redheads are worth 70 points each. Teals, gadwalls, shovelers, scaups, widgeons and other mergansers (except the hooded) are 10 point ducks, while drake mallards and all other species are 25-pointers.

Coots have a point value of zero, but there is a daily limit of 15 and a possession limit of 30 on these birds.

The daily limit is reached when the point value of the last duck taken, added to the values of the ducks already in the bag, reaches or exceeds 100 points. So if you confine your shooting to 10-point ducks, your daily limit is 10. But if your first duck happens to be a canvasback, you might as well pack up your decoys and go home.

The possession limit under the point system is the maximum number of ducks that could have been taken in two days of hunting.
