Hopkins testifies at hearings

U.S. Rep. Larry J. Hopkins, R-Ky., last week testified before a House subcommittee, recommending legislative changes in the National Gas Policy Act of 1978 that will relieve skyrocketing increases in natural gas prices.

"I wasn't involved in that legislation, so, perhaps, it's easy for me to point the finger in hindsight," Hopkins told members of the Fossil and Synthetic Fuels Subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee. "But there are obvious flaws which have strapped the gas consumers unnecessarily and the ball is now in our court as members of Congress to amend this law."

Hopkins outlined the impact on Kentucky's "poor, jobless and people living on fixed incomes — not to mention the rest of us. "Last July, Columbia Gas predicted a 23 percent rate increase over last year's heating costs. "We are now only in the middle of December and bills have already increased 12.5 percent. At this rate, we'll past the 23 percent estimate in January!

"These rate increases are unjustified, unreasonable and grossly unfair. They are artificially contrived with no consideration of current supply levels and they show a callous disregard for the harsh economic conditions now confronting American households and businesses," Hopkins said.

Covington Mutual to go out of business

The policyholders of Covington Mutual Insurance Co., Covington, have been asked to approve a plan to dissolve the company and reinsure all its policies through the Statesman Insurance Co., Indianapolis, Ind., according to Kentucky Insurance Commission Daniel D. Briscoe.

The policyholders' meeting to consider the plan will be held at Covington Mutual's home office, 629 Madison Avenue, Covington, on Dec. 21 at 9 a.m.

Hire new employees, get tax credits

Doesn't "saving thousands of tax dollars" have a nice ring to it?

This is the theme the state Cabinet for Human Resources uses to promote the federal government's targeted jobs tax credit program (TJTC). Under the program, employers earn tax credits by hiring new employees from certain targeted groups.

It looks like employers in the Bluegrass Area Development District are getting the message.

According to Human Resources Secretary Buddy Adams, employers in the Bluegrass area hired 1,007 new employees through the program between Oct. 1, 1981 and Oct. 30, 1982. During this time, Bluegrass employers potentially realized a total of $3.2 million in federal tax credits.

"The targeted jobs tax credit program makes it easy for businesses to take advantage of financial incentives available to employers hiring eligible youth, veterans and handicapped persons," Adams said. "These individuals traditionally have trouble finding a job, and have even more difficulty in this time of high unemployment," he added.

Employers who hire individuals full or part time from one of the targeted groups can receive a substantial federal tax credit. For every eligible individual hired, they can receive tax credits totaling 50 percent, up to $1,000, of the first year's wages paid, and 25 percent of the second year's wages paid, up to $1,500, in tax credit. "In a two-year period, an employer can save up to $4,500 per employee," Adams noted.

Tax credit

Obtaining the tax credit is simple. Employers request in writing certification on a prospective employee on or before the day the person begins work. An individual's eligibility for the program is determined by the local Manpower Services office in Lexington. If the prospective employee is eligible for the targeted jobs tax credit program, the certification form is sent to the employer. When the person is hired, the employer claims credit by filing Internal Revenue Service form 5884 with the federal income tax return.

Employers placing job orders with Manpower Services can request that only applicants who are eligible for the program be sent to them for job interviews, Adams added.

The targeted jobs tax credit program was recently extended by Congress through Dec. 31, 1984. Employers in Bourbon, Fayette, Harrison, Jessamine and Nicholas counties who want to learn more about the program may contact the Manpower Services office in Lexington, 300 E. Upper. The telephone number is 606-253-2330.

New Year's resolutions for sportsmen

by John Wilson

A lot of us wake up, perhaps not feeling too well, on New Year's morning and firmly resolve to mend our ways and straighten up our acts. After the usual resolution not to engage in any more New Year's Eve parties (at least for another year) we get down to the serious side of things.

Among the commitments to get more exercise, forego desserts, stick to the budget, pay more attention to the wife, kids and dog and the hunter does nothing to get attention or grab headlines. He leaves no trace of his having been in a particular area and he makes nobody mad — hence he doesn't get remembered or talked about.

So among our New Year's resolutions should be one in which we promise to take a close look at our attitudes and actions while we're engaged in hunting and fishing. Pay particular attention to those small, thoughtless unconscious acts —throwing a can or sandwich wrapper on the ground, for example — which seem insignificant but which, when multiplied, by all who do them, can have definite ill effects.

We should also resolve to learn more about the history of sportsmanship and conservation — how hunters and fishermen, through their license fees and excise taxes on their equipment, pay for wildlife programs to the tune of over $200 million annually. We should be able to defend our sport with facts — and the facts are on our side, which is why the anti-hunter appeals only to the emotions.

Another good resolution is to get involved in conservation issues — to have a very negative attitude toward the hunter, or sneer at him as an unsafe, careless, trespassing slob.

Unfortunately, there are those few out there who do handle firearms unsafely, who do trump over other people's property without asking permission, who do pepper road signs with shot, who do litter — the list could go on and on.

The problem is that these are the hunters who get all the notice. The safe, careful and respectful hunter does nothing to get attention or grab headlines. He leaves no trace of his having been in a particular area and he makes nobody mad — hence he doesn't get remembered or talked about.

Another good resolution is to get involved in conservation issues — to write that letter to your congressman, instead of just talking about it, to learn what problems confront wildlife and the out-of-doors in your area, to take action to assure the future of the outdoor sports you enjoy.

Finally, resolve to take a close look at line 21 of your Kentucky state income tax return. This line allows you to contribute a portion of your tax refund to wildlife. These tax deductible contributions will support non-game wildlife programs and the acquisition of natural areas by the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources and the Kentucky Nature Preserves Commission.
