School boards urged to limit fees

The state Board of Education has adopted a resolution encouraging local school districts to limit charges made for student fees.

At a meeting in Frankfort July 13, board members expressed concern that some students would be unable to pay fees unless they were kept to a minimum.

The members of the 1982 General Assembly repealed the statute forbidding local school districts from charging instructional fees. Some of Kentucky's school districts are now looking to instructional fees as a way to defray the escalating costs of running a school system, according to Superintendent of Public Instruction Raymond Barber.

"When you evaluate the fees, you have to evaluate the ability of the students in that district to pay them," Barber explained. "We would hate to see any student denied the opportunity to take a course because they didn't have the money for the course fee."

Barber went on to say that the state board could not prohibit excessive fees from being charged. That would be a matter for the General Assembly to undertake, he added.

The state board resolution states that "while recognizing budgetary constraints upon local school districts, it believes in the principle of a basically free public education for children."

Buckle up your children

Very few Kentucky children under four years old are "buckled up for safety," according to preliminary survey results released by the Kentucky State Police commissioner.

KSP Commissioner Marion D. Campbell said preliminary results from a University of Kentucky study being conducted for the state police revealed that in 18 cities an overall average of 14 percent of children under four were in some type of auto safety seat or child restraint device.

However, the surveyors also concluded that less than half the "restrained infants and toddlers were properly buckled or placed in an approved crash-tested seat, harness or shield.

Commissioner Campbell said this means only about six percent of children under four traveling on Kentucky highways are protected against death or injury in a traffic accident.

Employees of UK's Transportation Research Program conducted the survey by observing passenger vehicles at stop signs and traffic lights.

The most common mistake was absence of tethering or anchoring when the child restraint system required that modification, said Ken Agent, a UK research engineer who is the project head.

Lexington rated highest on child restraint system usage with 30 percent while Hazard, Carrollton and Somerset rated low with six percent.

Family violence meeting held

The second annual statewide conference on family violence will be held July 29 and 30 at the Ramada Inn on Waller Avenue in Lexington. Sponsored by the Lexington YWCA Spouse Abuse Center, the conference will focus on treatment of the violent family. The guest lecturer will be the Rev. Denis Madden, Ph.D., a clinical psychologist with the University of Maryland's School of Medicine.

Barton honored

Betty H. Barton, 220 High Street, Carlisle, was honored recently by South Central Bell with a retirement reception at the Holiday Inn in Winchester. She received a service emblem from the company and a Life Member plaque from the Telephone Pioneers of America.

Mrs. Barton began working for the company in 1954 as an operator in Carlisle and later held job assignments in Paris and Winchester. Prior to retirement, with 28 years of service, she was a dispatch clerk, Distribution Department, at Winchester.

She has one son, Billy Barton, and one daughter, Mrs. Lois Brierly, both of Carlisle.

Carlisle to have tournament

The 11 and 12 year old Little Leaguers will have an All-Star tournament in Carlisle beginning Monday, July 26, at 1:30 p.m. In that first game Paris will play Montgomery County East. In the 7 p.m. game Estill County will take on Cynthiana. On Tuesday at 5:30 p.m., Montgomery County West will play Nicholas County, and at 7 p.m. Lee County will play Bath County.

The semi-finals will be played on Thursday the 29th at 5:30 and 7, with the finals played on Friday, July 30th at 7 p.m.

In the meantime, the same All-Stars will play in a tournament at Cynthiana Friday, July 23. Nicholas County will play Lexington Southeast at 6 p.m.

Neighboring counties on unemployment list

The U.S. Department of Labor has added 62 Kentucky cities and counties to its list of "labor surplus areas" because of high unemployment, Human Resources Secretary Grady Stumbo announced recently.

Previously, only Covington, Louisville and the balance of Jefferson County were designated as labor surplus areas.

By having been designated as a labor surplus area, industries and businesses within these areas are eligible for preference in obtaining federal procurement contracts.

The aim of the U.S. Labor Department is to put a portion of the government's procurement dollars into areas where people are in the most economic need, said Ed Blackwell, Human Resources' chief labor market analyst.

To be included on the current list of labor surplus areas, counties' and cities' average unemployment rate must have been at least 20 percent higher than the national average jobless rate for the two previous years, said Blackwell. All of the 62 Kentucky areas experienced jobless rates of at least nine percent during that period, he said. The national average for the two years was 7.5 percent.

The period which the areas will carry the labor surplus designation is July 1, 1982 through May 31, 1983.

The 62 new labor-surplus areas in Kentucky include the counties of Bath, Bracken, Fleming, Montgomery and Robertson.
