Study computers at summer camp where their progress appear in green or black-white letters. Two students share each computer.

In previous years, laptops and programming have joined the traditional academic workbooks, pen, paper and typewriters.

"The thinking about a future in computer programming, but I've never worked on them before," says 15-year-old Lisa Williams, a participant in the summer's computer camp at Morehead State University.

"That's why I came here — to see if I'm interested."

Ms. Williams, a West Liberty resident, joins more than 30 other junior high and high school students taking part in four one-week camps at MSU and most have similar reasons for coming.

"People are becoming more and more interested in computers," says Ted Deek, MSU instructor of mathematics.

The camp includes 30 hours of instruction in programming computers and computer language.

Other than those in an advanced camp, these students hardly have no background in computers.

"Some have computers in their homes, but they don't know about programming," Pack notes.

Camp participants Michael Briggs and Tom Lake, both of Stanton, will be Powell County High School sophomores this year. Lake's father is a math teacher at the high school.

"He has a computer in his classroom," says Briggs. "I'll work on it some during breaks or between classes. We can come down here to learn more about them."

Camp participants work on microcomputers, which have keyboards similar to typewriters and screens a computer some day."

And Bailey is preparing for that. He's taking an advanced math course at MSU next fall which uses a computer.

The state is doing a brisk business in "Oh! Kentucky" specialty items, according to Dale Smith, commissioner of the Department of Economic Development.

Just the department sold some 20,000 items ranging from posters to jewelry made by hand, Smith said.

The department's Maps and Publications Office is filling some 500 orders a day for the merchandise.

"Oh! Kentucky" is, of course, the slogan for the state's award-winning tourism advertising campaign. Seeking to cash in on the campaign, the state last year contracted with a dozen companies to produce items carrying the now familiar theme.

The state acts as a middleman between the manufacturers and buyers and does not intend to make a profit in selling the items, Smith noted.

"This is a great way for us to spread the 'Oh! Kentucky' theme throughout the country," he said. "We've even had Kentucky take their overseas gifts."

Most in demand are lapel pins and storeware mugs, Smith said. Prices for various items range from eight cents for a lapel pin to $18.79 for a broochcase.

Orders are taken at the Maps and Publications Office, 133 Holmes Street, Frankfort, Ky. 40601. The phone number is 326-9475.

run-up in the Miss Kentucky National Teenager in both 1980 and '81 and was first runner-up at Germantown in 1980.

Melissa also won an award for the best newspaper at the Louisville competition.

Following is Melissa's winning essay.

My Place in the World

As a citizen of the United States of America, I'm thankful for the opportunity to be able to choose the career that will best represent me. As the Betty Graham has said, "America has the ability to take the best of each of us and allow us to find our own paths to fulfillment and thereby to America's own best fulfillment."

I graduated in May from Nicholas County High School and I will be attending Morehead State University this fall where I plan to major in Elementary Education and Early Childhood Development.

I love working with young children and I've had the opportunity to do volunteer work with a kindergarten class for the past two years. I've enjoyed this thoroughly and after my graduation from Morehead I hope to be a kindergarten teacher.

I also want to marry and have a family. But whatever I do in life, I want to do to the very best of my ability. I feel that we Americans of all people should be optimistic about the future and what it holds for us. Robert Browning expresses my feelings in "Poppo's Place":

"The years at the spring hot days at the morn; Morning's at seven; The child's dew-spear'd; The hawk's on the wing; The snail's on the shell; God's in his heaven — All's right with the world!"
