Kentucky Afield

An eagle spotted at Cave Run Lake

by John Wilson

The results of last January's eagle consensus show that Kentucky is attracting more and more wintering bald eagles each year, says Jim Durell, an assistant director of wildlife with the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources and the coordinator of the state eagle count.

"Our observers counted 141 bald eagles this year," Durell says, "and this is a significant increase from the 105 counted last year."

Since the nationwide eagle population is up only slightly, the big jump in Kentucky eagles probably means that more and more of these birds are choosing to winter here rather than wherever they've been going, Durell says.

By now, many of the eagles that spent the winter in Kentucky have moved out, according to Durell, and by summer almost all will be gone. Most of them probably spend the summers in the Great Lakes region and move south when lakes start to freeze over there.

The largest concentration of eagles was on the Ballard Wildlife Area in far western Kentucky, where 43 were sighted. Next in numbers of eagles was Land Between the Lakes, with 17.

In Eastern Kentucky, the biggest concentration is in the Dale Hollow-Cumberland region, where 24 eagles were counted. One bird was spotted at the Minor Clark Fish Hatchery at Cave Run Lake, the eastern-most eagle in the count.

As far as can be determined, no eagles have nested in Kentucky in recent times, although this situation might change in the next few years. Biologists at Land Between the Lakes are in the third year of a program which could establish a breeding population in the state.

The process, called "hacking," involves raising young eagles in an enclosed, elevated platform with minimal contact with humans. When the young birds are capable of flight, they are released and if all goes according to plan will return to the same area to breed when they mature.

So far, five eagles have been "hacked" in this manner over the last two years. But since it takes an eagle five years to mature, we won't know for at least another three years if these particular eagles will return and nest in Kentucky.

Eagles are, of course, strictly protected by both state and federal laws, as are all hawks, owls and other birds of prey. Populations of many of these birds (particularly fish eating ones like eagles and ospreys) reached critically low levels before DDT and other similar pesticides were banned.

Water Watching

If you're not sure, get your water tested

The water used by thousands of Eastern Kentuckians goes to college each month.

Samples are sent to Morehead State University's Water Testing Laboratory where tests are conducted for 30 area water systems, including Hazard, Jenkins, Olive Hill, Sandy Hook, Greenup, Prestonsburg and Owingsville, according to Dr. Ted Pass, lab director and professor of biology.

"We also test the University's water and the water here in Morehead," he adds.

Required by law, the tests check for bacteria which may indicate disease-causing organisms in public drinking water supplies.

Although city samples account for the majority of the testing, MSU's state-certified lab also tests water from private sources, such as wells or cisterns, for individuals.

To date, the lab has processed water samples from 40 Kentucky counties, including a few in Western Kentucky.

Dr. Pass explains the test: "Basically, what we look for are coliforms, bacteria native to mammals' intestinal tracts."

"While the coliforms themselves are relatively harmless, they show whether the water may be contaminated by human or animal wastes," he explains. "So, they are a useful indicator of the possible presence of disease-producing bacteria, such as those causing typhoid fever, dysentery, cholera or hepatitus virus.

Dr. Pass defines the test as a "preventive measure, so a problem doesn't go undetected for too long a period."

The lab does not give advice on how to solve contamination problems.

"We just tell what's there or not there," Dr. Pass says. "The health department will advise what should be added to the water to treat it if there is a problem."

The Kalash tribe

The 3,000 members of the Kalash tribe, in an isolated mountain area in northwest Pakistan, are alone among tribes in the region in that they never converted to Islam, National Geographic says.

In addition to testing drinking water in the region, the lab provides experience for MSU biology and environmental science students.

"This work gives them insight into lab procedures," he adds. "It teaches the students about lab management and the amount of paperwork involved. You have to keep logs for the state; everything has to be fully documented."

The practical experience "gives them an edge" once the students finish school and begin looking for laboratory jobs.

Since the MSU lab was certified in 1979, over 5,000 samples have been tested there. About 30 percent are from private water sources.

Additional information about testing water from private drinking sources is available from Dr. Ted Pass, UPO 804, MSU, Morehad, Ky. 40351. The telephone number is 606-783-3148.

DO WE PRACTICE WHAT WE SING?
"I Love To Tell The Story"—If it doesn't last more than twenty minutes. "Take My Life And Let It Be"—yes, let it be, dear Lord. "Sweet Hour of Prayer"—is indeed wonderful, but I'm really too busy. "I Love To Tell The Story"—but only in church. "Have Thine Own Way Lord"—with someone else, not me. "Lead Me To Some Soul Today"—but wait until I have a convenient season. "If Jesus Goes With"—it may be embarrasing for us both.

City police report accident

City police report a wreck Sunday, May 30, about 7 a.m. on North Broadway in Carlisle.

A car driven by James J. Evans, 17, Route 2, Carlisle, was headed south, left the roadway on the right hand side and struck a car driven by Charles Marshall of Reading Road, Cincinnati. The Marshall vehicle, parked at the time, was pushed back into the yard, tearing up some grass in the process. Property damage to the yard was reported owned by Bill Ledford.

Wrecks injure three, kills deer on Friday

Three persons were injured, and a car and a pickup were totally destroyed following a collision on Highway 32, Myers Road, five miles north of Carlisle at about 6:30 a.m. Friday.

A car driven by William A. House Jr. of Slidell, La., according to sheriff's reports, crossed the center line and struck head-on a pickup driven by Jerry Watkins, 24, Route 4, Carlisle. Both vehicles went down an embankment and were totaled. House was taken to Nicholas County Hospital where he was treated for cuts and bruises and released.

Car strikes deer

A deer ran across U.S. 68 about six miles north of Carlisle at 3:15 a.m. Friday, May 28, striking a car belonging to a Georgia man, causing moderate damage, according to sheriff's reports.

James Hubbs of Lagrange, Ga. was driving the car, which received damage to the right front fender, hood and headlight. The deer was killed and was given away by the game warden.

ASCS warns farmers about certain chemicals

All farmers are reminded, Anna Conner of the Nicholas County ASCS says, that tobacco treated with toxaphene, endrin, DDT, or TDE after being transplanted will not be eligible for price support. Prior to the issuance of marketing cards, all producers will be asked to certify whether or not any of these chemicals were used on the tobacco. Action to withhold price support on tobacco treated with these chemicals was made necessary because their use threatens the export market for tobacco. Several countries that are large buyers of U.S. tobacco have set very narrow pesticide tolerance on tobacco. The county extension service office can furnish information about acceptable pesticides which are effective in controlling plant pests.

Local farmers are encouraged to report all spring-seeded crops planted on their farms as soon as possible, but no later than July 15. All grain crops should be reported whether or not the farmer participated in the 1982 acreage reduction programs. For farmers who did not participate in the program, certification will be an important factor in determining the 1982 acreage bases. Farmers participating in the acreage reduction program must report all spring-seeded crops plus conservation use acreage by July 15 to be eligible for program benefits.
